11 Steps to Leaving Your Daddy:
A Radical Love Letter to Women

By
Vanessa Prestridge Graf, PsyD, LMFT

11 Steps to Leaving Your Daddy: A Radical Love Letter to Women Copyright © 2025 by Vanessa Prestridge Graf All rights reserved.

ISBN: 9798272326140

No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, includ-ing photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the author.

Published by Gifted Enterprises, LLC
Printed in the United States of America

To pot-stirrers everywhere ...

Table of Contents

About this message.....iv

Chapter 1..... Leave the House 1

Chapter 2 .....The Art of No (Boundary Setting 101) 27

Chapter 3 .....Quit Church 41

Chapter 4 ..... Make Money 66

Chapter 5 ..... Take a Lover (Not a Husband) 78

Chapter 6 .....Meet Your Vagina/Rewrite Herstory 97

Chapter 7 ..... Your Internalized Misogyny 115

Chapter 8 ..... Righteous F---ing Indignation 129

Chapter 9 .....Know Better, Be Better, Do Better 164

Chapter 10 .....Come to Jesus, Drip, Drip, Drip, or Both 174

Chapter 11 ..... In Charge of Happy 190

Postscript 206

of love and encouragement.

Consider these words from Wise Mind to your Inner Child: a newsflash for your fear and a Declaration of Independence from Daddy or any person who would assert authority over you. This may be a biological father who assumes control and superiority, a husband whose 'love' is oppressive, possessive, and controlling, or any person (usually a man) who keeps you in lockstep with the generations of nameless women who served mankind before you. (Note: Maybe not all 'daddies' are Daddys who overtly oppress women but be very sure the patriarchy is made up of nothing but Daddys!)

This love letter is a roadmap out of the patriarchal matrix that has you feeling trapped and onto the Mothership, a matriarchal paradigm of freedom. The Mothership permits you to question everything you have held as gospel and to encourage a remembrance of who you were before you were told who to be.

As anyone paying attention can clearly see, the current planetary ruling system is a patriarchal nightmare. Mankind - literally men - built the paradigms that rule the world: All religions, geopolitical boundaries, governments, everything has emanated from the masculine paradigm. Women, alongside their male counterparts, wrote treatises, made discoveries, and were great thinkers (all while bleeding), yet were suppressed, subjugated, persecuted, controlled, and even burned at the stake.

Quite possibly one of your ancestors.

Women are tired of asking, begging, finagling, or 'marrying into freedom' and are breaking free from the illusion of male protection or superiority and the trappings of self-sacrifice. A force of Mother Nature is brewing and is sweeping the planet with healing (crisis) energy. Mother Nature, the Divine Feminine, All the Women and All the Girls Everywhere are waking up to their power and independence and recognizing the need for new leadership everywhere, but especially in America.

The times they are a 'changin'...

The Dalai Lama spoke of the world being saved by Western Women. Even today, as the rights of Western Women are on the chopping block, there is a groundswell of hope and creativity like never before - a renaissance of female voices. Watch as a great artistic, political, and spiritual rebirth emerges - the Divine Feminine - bringing an equal and opposite reaction to toxic masculinity's last power grab. Watch as a Universal Feminine perspective unapologetically asserts itself in positions of power and influence. Young women are openly questioning the status quo of marriage and wondering if they want to bring babies into the dystopian nightmare currently sabotaging their freedoms. And despite centuries of screaming women cutting their hair, ripping their clothes, and gnashing their teeth, the patriarchy's evolution appears to be stalled or worse, going backward. The Old Guard's grip on power is tighter than ever. And because desperate times call for desperate measures, perhaps women's fight for personal freedom and autonomy could be taken to the bedroom. Maybe it's time for every woman to capitalize on the power of her most outstanding feature; that thing coveted and dreamed about by men; what they go crazy over, lose their minds about, and commit crimes for, what they crave to touch, to possess, to copulate with, and regrettably to legislate. Only women have it. You have it.

Your Pussy

Yep, it's been there all along, right under your nose, your power portal. Take a moment to let that sink in: your lady parts...revered by mankind; the gateway to life and consciousness itself. Don't be a woman who doesn't give her vagina credit, or all the vaginas credit, for the hard work done throughout the centuries, birthing and nurturing mankind despite the stinging backlash of misogyny.

Learning to love and respect your vagina and becoming intentionally responsible for her maintenance is next-level self-care. Rescuing her from the patriarchal job description and wielding her power with discernment makes you unshakable. Sexual energy is creative energy. Harnessing and transmuting it enhances creativity in all areas of your life. Decentering men is re-centering you, and with her help, your creativity. Recognizing your innate ability to create beyond baby-making is aligning with your True Self and walking a path that may or may not include childbearing. The patriarchy's assertion (demand?) that a woman's place is barefoot and pregnant, patiently waiting Daddy's return from the world while keeping his dinner warm, is as insulting as it is transparent. A woman's wholehearted and complete sacrifice in bearing children and raising quality humans is the expectation of the patriarchal model. Free childcare and domestic support are an integral part of Daddy's success. A mother's self-sacrifice often goes on far too long, way after the departure of the young ones. Many women feel obligated to continue serving the adults in their households.

So, ask yourself this question: Am I living my chosen path or someone else's? Your gut knows. Of course, if you have children, you love them and make daily sacrifices for them - that's expected, for a time. And you should feel good about that. Few relationships have the healing potential of the mother/child dynamic; the deep joy of connection, knowing a person fundamentally because you built this little human right inside your body! And you lovingly and willingly sacrifice your time, money, energy, and all your resources for years. Good job, Mama!

Still, if you are reading these words, it's safe to assume a reassessment of your world is in progress. Reassessing should be a safe, secure, and private process. It's okay to think and feel what you've denied yourself. Note it. This is self-discovery. Mother Nature blesses and encourages the discovery and recognition of your True Self.

This radical love letter is to Her. Your True Self - the one that the world doesn't see or hear from as much, the one who is beautiful and worthy of being seen, heard, and expressed. Please proceed with curiosity and reckless abandon of patriarchal directives. Declare some kick-ass intentions for personal freedom! The suggestions and recommendations within these pages might scare or challenge you. Take it lightly, smile, hug yourself, and remember this is your life to do with what you will. Changing your mind, direction, or trajectory is 100% your prerogative.

But WAIT!

While making these assessments, imagine a matriarchal thought bubble enveloping the planet. Imagine Mother Nature's seasonal color palette enveloping humanity's senses in tender, loving embraces and rhythmic cycles and patterns of experience that foster growth and expansion of love and consciousness. What if, instead of Father Time's matrix dictating life's meaning as accumulating wealth and property, conquering nations, and controlling and oppressing women, it were more about the ebb and flow of life on the planet? What if success were measured in connectivity with other humans and the health and well-being of the collective? What if mutual respect for all species were a given, and cooperation replaced competition, collaboration replaced control, and 'the power of love replaced the love of power'?

Mother Nature would rejoice, her needs elevated in the collective concern of humanity, who is both her custodians and her children. Under the current patriarchal authority, the planet's life is hanging by a thread. Men suck at housekeeping. Misplaced priorities and unauthorized arrogance have clouded their contribution. Sure, they 'built the world,' but now they are burning it down and starving its children.

Alignment with the Divine Feminine qualities of ebbing, flowing, connecting, nurturing, intuiting, feeling, and mutually respecting all life will fill the gap that's missing from the patriarchal manifesto. These missing qualities are the exact prescription for what ails planet Earth today. So, it seems there is only one solution:

The complete and total takeover by women!

It's doable and it's happening. And you are right here, right now.

So ... how do you do it? Start with Chapter 1.

STEP 1:

Leave the House

A butterfly wasn't always a butterfly. Even the most exquisite monarch was a hot mess ten days ago - a sloppy heap in the chrysalis as her body parts dissolved around her. No doubt she feels scared. Little does she know her plump and dumpy caterpillar body goo was being repurposed into beautiful butterfly wings for taking flight and antennae for connecting with Mother Nature, the metamorphosis complete.

It's a miracle! It's also ordinary - even mundane. Metamorphosis follows a predictable path: growth, dissolution, then the freedom to fly. It's a predictable and wholesome template for liberation and self-expression.

If you are here, reading these words, you are likely in some stage of transformation. Congratulations! You are not alone.

Millions of women are wriggling in their chrysalises, wondering how to become happier and healthier in pursuit of their bliss. Whether you're a young woman launching from Daddy's nest, a college professor expanding her freedom, or a hot CEO who's outgrown the gilded cage of her marriage, this is your lifeline. Here you will find words of empathy, understanding, support, and encouragement. And maybe some ideas? Yes, some radical ideas for self-love and self-care. You are here. ☆

For the Girls, all the Girls, the Internet Girls …

Moving out of your childhood home is inevitable, expected, and anticipated. It's the first big step toward autonomy - like launching your life raft from the bow of the Daddyship.

Some girls are fortunate enough to leave the nest to attend college after high school, usually around age 18, ushered under Daddy's wing and his bank account. The amount of autonomy in choosing a college depends on the family culture. Is Daddy in charge?

If he is paying, he may exert financial power over your choice of school, lean on you to attend his alma mater, or have a heavy hand tipping the scales of your decision-making. You may or may not notice his influence, or whether your mother - his wife - weighs in at all.

Did you choose your college? Were there stipulations, like maintaining a certain GPA, who you date or don't date, where you live, what you pursue as a major, and how you spend your free time? All this could be under Daddy's thumb. It might not feel like control when you're 18 years old, but if you're an artist corralled into business because Daddy thought it was a better career path, it will certainly catch up to you later in life. So…Girl, be aware of stipulations, and there usually are some.

You are fortunate if you are attending, or have attended, the college of your choice, free and clear, paid for and sanctioned by Daddy. Or if you borrowed money from a bank to attend school, you have unfettered decision-making, and there should be no compromises if you know how to assert yourself.

So, graduate and keep on going!

Pursuing education is always a winning strategy for leaving Daddy. Don't want a four-year degree? Or an associate? No worries! Certifications abound for women outside traditional gender roles. Want to be an electrician? How about an ultrasound technician, a welder, an engineer, a florist, or a business owner? Break outside the box, think outside the box, and stand on the box!

Got entrepreneurial chops to start a business or launch an idea or invention? With a four-year degree or a professional certification and some good connections, or a few dollars … a career of your choosing is within reach! Whether a liberal arts education, science and math, or learning a skilled trade is your path, investing in yourself will open doors for the future and enrich the present.

Experience in a career field will fuel autonomy and ignite a fire of your independence and freedom! Working to support yourself is a source of pride, and having a job or career as you settle into your own place is the first adjustment after school.

Making enough money to support yourself is crucial and your first goal is jumping out of Daddy's frying pan and...

... into the Fire!

Not all girls pursue college right out of high school. Some decide, instead, to jump from the Daddyship into a boat, canoe, kayak, or life raft of another man, another Daddy at the helm.

With little or no experience in navigating adult relationships, you are likely destined to become a man-child wrangler with only your parents' marriage as a template. It's also likely that you make sacrifices with ease to make sure your new Daddy is happy. Well, at least this handsome distraction offers a one-way ticket out of Daddy's house, and with any luck, you might enjoy doing each other all night, and for a young circus pony craving adventure, that's compelling!

This can be an escape from the childhood home, but not the 'Daddy' dynamic. You can continue growing up by projecting all unfinished Daddy business onto your partner and vice versa. It's not a horrible escape plan; you feel loved and love this person, right? Fate has thrown you together for some damn reason, right?

These young 'lesson loves' are as essential and karmic as the lasting love found later in life. Sometimes, there's a 'Soulful' knowing that you have 'outgrown' the man-child, that you are not happy and are choosing to kick the can down the road, that you are postponing your happiness in service to the man-child, and a fear of being alone. As years spiral round and round, one day you may realize you've been ignoring a still, quiet voice inside that suggests there's more for you to be, do, experience, and love.

Perhaps now you see it as a relationship that stifles you, chosen when you were younger, naïve, and vulnerable. Maybe you can identify the primary reason you chose this path with this man, like escaping Daddy's house, or a small town, or you had a major crush and were 16 years old, or you got pregnant! Or at 22, you're right out of school, everybody knows the next step is marriage, then babies. This might be a painful realization: marching to Father Time's drumbeat and counting your fertile years, you may have felt pressure, or perhaps your girlfriends were getting married, and your FOMO (fear of missing out) became deafening.

Is your relationship what you hoped for, and does it meet your needs? Are you your authentic self, or do you placate your Daddy-man? In other words: Is this you? Or are you who you think he wants you to be? It's okay to be honest with yourself and to acknowledge all you've gained; you can proceed with no regrets. You're confident and have only gratitude for all you have learned and gained from the relationship. But you've outgrown it. You might find you're pissed off once you admit your unhappiness, but you can nevertheless acknowledge that you made this choice and be grateful that you can unmake it.

Not all marriages are cages, and not all cages are horrible; some offer material luxuries, expensive creature comforts, and whatever pride and prestige there is in being the good wife/mother by patriarchal standards. Marriage and family bring endless opportunities for learning about relationships and love, and (for women) self-sacrifice. Even in difficult marriages, the love of children and the joyful family moments balance the tense patterns of placation and capitulation to Daddy's control. Being a wife and mom brings pride - you do it mostly with unconditional love. After all, this is a family that YOU created (with a tiny drop of help).

Your children are potential besties for life. And being their mother might have helped you recognize yourself as a robust advocate, an intelligent spokesperson, resolved and braver than ever, and if you decide to, you can challenge Daddy and the situation your marriage has become. You are mature, together, and a Boss. You have realized personal power, found your voice, and if your marriage feels oppressive, like a prison, you can change it.

Being your husband's wife or your children's mother is no reason to lose yourself.

Looking for unconditional love, protection, or direction anywhere but within yourself will ultimately leave you empty. Sometimes, this is realized in an unhappy relationship with Daddy, and sometimes it takes several unhappy relationships with Daddys to finally come home to yourself.

You are the Love of Your Life!

Ponder this: How have you treated Daddy, and what you have provided him: (eye candy for one and all the upkeep it entails), emotional support, hand-holding through storms, navigating his family dynamics, carrying, birthing and raising his children, all the services you've provided through the years, the sacrifices you have made on his behalf, the purchases, plans, vacations, and holidays. Consider if you did a fraction of that for yourself! Imagine funneling that time, energy, money, and freedom to your best interest ... exactly what would you do? Would you be someone different?

Taking good care of You is a priority. Even if you're living with a partner or a husband, aim to take care of yourself at least as well as your parents did, and hopefully better. If you think and feel independently of your partner or husband, your parents did a good job, and so, without a second thought, you permit yourself to pursue your dreams. If this seems selfish, check your internalized misogyny. You are more than Daddy's helpmate. You are more than a side dish. You are a 7-course meal, layered with flavor, rich in nutrition, and yummy sweetness that is deeply satisfying.

Becoming Yourself

Once out of the house, you are safe to move out from under Daddy's influence. If you are escaping an oppressive environment, healing begins once you remove yourself from the toxicity. Your shoulders drop, your belly relaxes, and you have a long exhale. Still, you need time to allow your nervous system to heal from the state of self-protection and defense that you have learned. Are you aware of how guarded and afraid you were? Do you feel the familiar knot in your gut? Take a breath. Take your time. Allow your nervous system to unwind so you can begin to recalibrate a new normal: emotional safety. No rush. Your inner damsel in distress might be scared. She's saying, 'What if you can't take care of yourself? What? No Daddy?? What if nobody ever wants you again? What if you're destined to be alone? What if you can't afford Botox!?'

Remind that little girl that you have always been there for her; you are the Love of Your Life. You, above everyone else, have been there for her/you every single day. Reframe each 'what if' to 'even if;' for example:

- Even if I am alone, it won't kill me; and if I am lonely, I can feel and heal it because I'm the Love of My Life, I make the choices, feel the feelings, and heal them.

- Even if I can't afford Botox, spa care, or whatever - I can rearrange my budget to include it; there's no need to defend it to anyone. It's my money and my choice.

- I embrace the disappointment of my scared little girl inside like a good mommy. I know feelings won't kill me. Feeling, accepting, and releasing emotions is the beginning of the nervous system calming and recalibrating. I can comfort myself and love myself today.

- An inner dialogue of acceptance and understanding is all that's required to heal. Tell your inner girl what she's always wanted to hear. Then remind her that she is safe.

Learning to manifest healthy relationships starts with excellent self-care. Developing a good 'picker' is a process of growing self-awareness. Discerning charm from narcissism is a steep learning curve! Determining the qualities you want in a man, instead of hoping he 'picks' you, is a good start. Being yourself is perfect. Please never shrink to fit. Don't be someone else, so he will like you better.

Partnering up is a common way to get by while attending college or trade school, getting a job, and beginning your adult life, but it means you're tethered to a boyfriend. It'd be great if you feel no pressure to marry him or to get pregnant. There is time to make that kind of choice once you have more understanding of your own needs and your autonomy from Daddy.

Besties or Bucket of Crabs?

Jumping off the Daddyship? Your besties are the ultimate safe place to land. Packs > patriarchy. Sharing an apartment, house, and lifestyle can be a good choice, maybe the time of your life! Grinding at your job, sharing a social life, having fun, and working through problems together are as valuable as any relationship experience with a man. When all strive toward greater autonomy and independence together, you and your besties create the life you love! Group synergy is motivating and dynamic, offering opportunities for advocating and negotiating, sharing finances, offering emotional support, and cooperative living. You learn and grow with your besties, creating a good life of mutual respect and community. Just like Mother Nature intended with all her creatures. The girls are the best!

Beware the Downside

They say crab buckets need no lid - the bottom crab always yanks down the one escaping. Pulling each other down keeps the bucket full of those crabs, just as 'friends' who would drag you down as you level up. That can't be you. If you work, grind, and level up, and your friend group isn't applauding and encouraging your advancement on your chosen path, then have no fear; it's not them. It's you. You're in the wrong bucket!

A painful part of maturing is watching 'friends' behave like crabs in your bucket, dragging you down as you level up. These relationships may disappear or, sometimes, evolve into healthier ones through empathy and open communication. Friend groups evolve and rearrange themselves. There are heartbreaks, ghostings, glow-ups, upsets, and disappointments - all growing pains and more lessons in love.

Expect Rain

Navigating the emotional waters of friendships is a skill that grows. And like any skill, you get better at picking friends and avoiding 'crabs,' and taking command and becoming the captain of your bucket.

Remember, you've likely been trained to care more for others than yourself. And prioritizing yourself may feel wrong. But it's not. Asserting your needs and being authentic in every environment is the measure of mental health.

It's okay to 'clean house' once you leave the house. You may find other friendships or even family relationships to be toxic.

Some friendships (even with family) belong in the trash. It's okay to let go, for them to float away on the air of inactivity, or, if necessary, to toss a bomb to blow up a toxic bridge. Stop being a nice person when being a good person is all that is required of you.

Ask your gut; she knows. If you've been fortunate enough to find a true friend, a soulmate friend, she can be an intimate source of connection as you break toxic bonds. Feeling fear and transmuting it into love is a serious undertaking. Extending comfort to yourself that only the Love of your Life can give, while having a friend to encourage and understand is priceless!

You are rich, indeed.

The Radical Way Out or Middle Fingers Way Up

As the saying goes, desperate times call for desperate measures. If you are living in fear, whether physical, emotional, or psychological, you have every right to leave as soon as you can in any way you can and as safely as you can. If he is vengeful or violent, you must be stealthy in your planning, maybe including your Bestie for support. You're not asking for permission to leave.

You're just leaving.

Pack a GO bag now! You know, a change of clothes, a spare toothbrush, clean underwear, and any medication you take. Put it in your trunk like you did when you were pregnant. Your safety is Priority One. Assuming you have a job and some income, you can likely crash at a friend's house until you can arrange a place. If you are walking this path, there is more wrong than basic misogyny. There could be significant pathology. Be courageous. Your safety is of utmost importance - more than being nice or protecting bad male behavior. You've done that long enough.

Self-love in action is being the Love of Your Life.

Prioritize your safety

Once you are out of Daddy's house, safe and sound, and in your own space, feel free to 'out' any misogynistic behavior you experience, past or present. You're not petty; it's called boundaries and self-respect.

Self-love looks like this: turning fear into righteous anger. Flip the mental switch of Daddy-as-authority and claim your inherent power. After all, you're a grown-ass woman who has incredibly pure energy, is open-hearted, willing to share holistically, and be a part of the family. If you're depressed and angry, chances are your voice has been silenced, or you don't like the box you've been given - the job description of self-sacrifice and servitude to Daddy. (BTW: It's epic to realize this now instead of 10 years from now!)

Remember, men pose the greatest threat to women today. Women are most often hurt/killed/burned at the stake by men. Please don't give your care and well-being to a man for safekeeping. It's understandable to feel fearful and to need reassurance if you have been traumatized, and if so, please don't look to a man to 'keep you safe.' Instead, address the trauma with a therapist. Go and pay someone to teach you a skill set to feel safer, whether it's clearing unhealed trauma from the past or learning to kick a man's ass to protect yourself if need be. Consider taking a Krav Maga self-defense class to build confidence and strength. Take action to reduce fear and other negative emotions. Check out Nervous System Mastery in the Self-Care Suggestions and recalibrate your nervous system. Retrain it for safety.

Feeling safe is attainable without handing it over to a man. Figuring out how to love yourself, take exquisite care of yourself, and give yourself what you need to feel safe and thrive is absolute tyranny against the patriarchy. Acting as the Love of Your Life will bring everything you need. Fear is the absence of love, and Self-love turns fear into righteous indignation. Feeling safe is multi-layered, yeah? Address all layers.

Git it!

Leaving a marriage? Divorce is probably not your area of expertise; therefore, you absolutely cannot allow Daddy to drive it. Lawyer up, sister! The same rules apply: Financial independence. Period. Daddy isn't the boss of you. Or your divorce. Take your 50%. Waive nothing.

Watch how Daddy morphs in the face of leaving him. You'll see tantrums, threats, and theatrics. Faced with a loss of control, he might become louder and scarier to demand that you acquiesce to his definition of child support or the list of assets. Please don't allow him to dissuade you from representation. True colors show when you don't share his perspective and are not under his control. So, you'll need a champion, a professional, to cover every nook and cranny of your interests. Once you find them (ask a friend for a referral), set a boundary with Daddy and turn it over to the lawyer. You don't have to explain yourself, and you certainly don't need approval or even understanding. He can take it to his lawyer.

Even with economic independence from Daddy resist the impulse to sacrifice and comply as you probably did during your entire marriage. Invest in the Love of Your Life. Independence includes receiving everything due you, not by what Daddy says, but by what the judge says after things are sorted out. You're not 'taking him to the cleaners,' you are receiving what is due you as represented by the state. Let the lawyer do her work.

This is a bold act of Self-Love. Congratulations. You chose the Love of Your Life.

A Recap

Please don't allow Daddy to talk you into doing away with a lawyer because he's 'got you'... (eye roll). Know that you might downsize your lifestyle, but what is the price of freedom to be yourself, to pursue your bliss, be it a happy hour with friends without explanation, or having an affair with your high school sweetheart.

When you belong to yourself, all options are on the table. A cornerstone of any Daddy's hold is your dependency on him. Whether it's financial or emotional, it can be resolved. While it's natural for the first 18-22 years of life to be under Daddy's tutelage, he should loosen his grip when you begin to think for yourself.

Daddy has a big hand in providing and caring for you; he could demonstrate egalitarian family leadership shared with your mother. If you witnessed this in your childhood home, you likely have no difficulty asserting yourself or asking that your needs be met.

The financial tie is simpler to unravel than the emotional one once your adult life begins. The emotional tie likely comes with false beliefs that Daddy may have taught you, that he knows what's best for you, or that you owe him some allegiance. It makes sense to hear that as a child, and if you're giving Daddy the benefit of the doubt, it isn't particularly misogynistic.

But once an adult, the emotional lie that he knows what's best for you, that he is your protector or authority, is blatantly oppressive and the basis of toxic masculinity.

Of course, Daddy could be a husband.

A matriarchal template is being born without precedent, a language evolving to express a woman's need to be wholly independent and autonomous, as is her human right. Your right.

Remember:

Exerting financial power is a favorite patriarchal control technique that permeates marriages and relationships worldwide, not to mention entire governments. The Vatican is the 18th wealthiest country in the world, all men, pure patriarchy, right down to the sexual abuse, misogyny, and lies perpetuated to maintain control of the masses of Catholics, the largest denomination of Christians on Earth. You can buy a ticket to tour the Vatican Museum, where you can purchase souvenirs, rosaries, crucifixes, or Vatican Coins. Remember how Jesus, the Christian figure, reacted to the sellers in the Temple of Jerusalem? He was not a fan.

Financial independence from any Daddy is imperative for your total freedom and autonomy. Lifestyle changes happen, but you control what that looks like! Even with economic independence, the impulse to sacrifice and comply exists. Resist. Invest in the Love of Your Life. Independence includes receiving everything that is due to you, not based on what Daddy says, but on what the professionals recommend after things are sorted out.

Permit yourself to prioritize You. You are the only one who can.

A Word about the Playlists:

Music is incredibly cathartic. It's reflective and supportive of you in your evolution. Female artists scream, wail, and whisper your truth. Press play. Feel less alone. It's like discovering friends when you're lost in the woods. Friends that bring the frill and the spine and the words - oh, the words that you so need to hear.

Especially now that you're leaving Daddy! You might feel like dancing!

As you find artists with whom you resonate, you will begin to heal and adopt some of their strength, confidence, and, indeed, their vibe! Find the female artists who demonstrate turning pain into creativity (and money!), thereby healing themselves and YOU!

Madonna, the OG rabble-rouser. Beyoncé, Ariana, Aretha, Taylor, SZA, Miley, Lizzo, Sabrina, Dua Lipa, Lady Gaga, P!nk, Tina, Chappell, Qveen Herby - the genre of female empowerment and creative expression at its finest! Feminine rage music, too. Search it on Spotify!

The contribution of Black Women and Women of Color in America to the liberation of all women deserves deep respect and acknowledgment. The generational and cultural trauma Black Women have endured, escaped, and transcended is immeasurable. The Black Girl artists recommended in these playlists are women who aren't afraid to expose personal pain and injury, sexual and relationship vulnerability, and independence from Daddy. Listening to Black Female Artists will light you up! Listening to feminine rage music will light everybody up!

Get on that train and write some lyrics or poetry of your own. Enjoy. Maybe dance naked.

A Word about Suggestions:

Some women are clueless about self-care beyond manicures and pedicures.

Knowledge about self-care affirms the 'Love of Your Life' status, setting intentions to prioritize addressing your needs, nourish your Soul, and walk or dance your path.

Tending to your emotional and spiritual needs is just as important as taking care of your nails and skin. Just in case you are challenged and need some ideas, consider trying something new. Or simply turn the page to read on. Both responses are great. Every suggestion is made with Love, respect, and consideration for you. All have been vetted for their potency!

A Word about Not Man-Hating

This isn't about 'man-hating', it's about system-hating. Mislabeling this work as 'man-hating' clearly misses the point of this radical love letter. Some men are awesome and seem to understand that misogyny has ruled the culture in America for too long. Some men are allies who stand in solidarity with women seeking empowerment and autonomy. Of course, men have been damaged by the patriarchal stronghold as well, but this book is about women's need for freedom from the patriarchy. (White) Men's freedoms have never been restricted. Yeah, yeah, not all men oppress women. But all women have been oppressed by men. It's embedded in the system. It's spoon-fed misogyny.

All women. All.

Where are these 'good men' who deserve love and respect? The supportive men vote for women's rights, yet they have erred on the side of caution. They have not sufficiently stood up or forced their peers to evolve. Good men's collective silence and inactivity have inevitably supported the oppression of women. Why is this still the case? What can be done?

What about a pussy strike?

What about forcing celibacy on the whole lot of patriarchal dinosaurs and their offspring? Forced celibacy, like taking away their favorite toy, is less about punishing men and more about giving them an incentive to do better.

Think about it!

Men can fix this; they can address the inequities against women and right the wrongs of the patriarchal corruption that permeates American culture. This is tough love, consequences, and, most of all, the incentive to grow. The patriarchy needs a time-out, a consequence of the bad male behaviors gone unchecked for centuries. Forced celibacy sets up an incentive to gain access to pussy. Access through evolution. It's time to walk upright.

Incels (involuntary male celibates) need to look in the mirror. The patriarchy needs a time-out, a consequence of the bad male behaviors gone unchecked for centuries. Forced celibacy sets up an incentive to gain access to pussy. Men must evolve in order for the species to survive through procreation.

Evolutionary Goals:

- Checking men's 'entitlement' to pussy (especially married men),
- Setting a standard for decent behavior going forward,
- Reinstating reproductive freedom in America and worldwide,
- Eradicating domestic violence and gun violence,
- Reinstating laws to protect women,
- Outlawing child marriage in America and worldwide
- Outlawing marital rape in America and worldwide.

Men are invited and welcomed to learn the combination to unlock the portal of sweetness. It's not rocket science, and, at the same time, it's certainly NOT an entitlement. Hint: If you're a man and you want to have sex with a woman, be someone she wants to have sex with … research it if you need to … and become a vocal activist for women … educate your bros, Bruh.

One more thing: This is not about men or whether these words hurt their feelings. Men are coarse learners with proud egos. There are zero new concepts in these pages, but still, the ideas do not land with some of the most powerful men in the country and the women who serve them. Not man-hating, but certainly patriarchy-hating with the full intention to take it down.

PSA: If you can be a lesbian, be one.

Chapter 1 Playlist

Freedom (Beyoncé)

Yes, and (Ariana Grande)

IDGAF (Dua Lipa)

Woman (Kesha, feat. The Dap-Kings Horns)

I Like That (Janelle Monae)

Dead Men Don't Rape (Delilah Bon)

Not All Men (Morgan St. Jean)

Martyr (KiNG MALA)

Diamond Heart (Lady Gaga)

Purity (Lilyisthatyou)

Chapter 1 Self-Care Suggestions

Find a therapist.

You're here, that's step one. You can help yourself quite a lot. However, some issues that bother you might not be accessible without help, such as an itch in the middle of your back. Some things call for a deeper look and a safe conversation with a professional who knows some stuff about boundaries, trauma, conflict, and all things human suffering. Google psychologytoday.com and click on 'Find a therapist', and like any practitioner, you might have to try a couple before you find the right fit. When choosing a therapist, go with your gut - feeling safe and not judged is the goal. It's a personal journey that can lead you to yourself with kindness and empathic support. Avoid religious therapists, or you will get distorted patriarchal (Biblical) messaging about being a good wife, performing your duties as a wife and mother. This is more of the same messaging you are trying to escape! Pick wisely and do your due diligence.

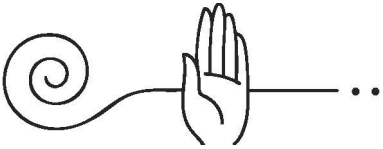
Read books by feminist authors like bell hooks, Margaret Atwood, Toni Morrison, Virginia Woolf, Maya Angelou, and many others; let your Soul be your guide and trust it.

Devour podcasts and TED Talks about authentic living in this inauthentic world. Work on emotional control - a calm woman is a powerful one. Check out the Abundance Alchemist's program on 'Nervous System Mastery.' You won't regret it!

Google Mel Robbins! Watch her on YouTube, listen to her podcasts, and read her books on how to know when it's time to move on, as well as so many other topics. She's a Boss who has created her dream life. Absorb excellent and valuable information and seek profound healing.

As you know, Knowledge is power. Gain knowledge. Embrace yourself as The Love of Your Life. Get a mani/pedi. Pick a color you've never worn



STEP 2:

The Art of No
(Boundary Setting 101)

What happened to you after you were two years old? As a two-year-old, you were excellent at saying no; in fact, saying the word 'No!' is so prominent for toddlers that the second year of life has been coined the 'terrible twos.' A significant part of a two-year-old's development is saying 'no' loudly and often, as they explore the world in search of occasional 'yeses.'

But saying 'No!' clearly and often fades for many girls as they grow into compliant daughters, good girls, ingenues, and debutantes, all too often believing that Father knows best. And maybe he does when you're two! Less so when you're 22 and embarking on a career or picking a partner or a lover.

Breaking away from home encourages your maturity and self-discovery outside the family parameters as you define your likes and dislikes, your passions, and your turn-offs. This process involves differentiating from the little girl the family knows to the emerging adult woman, who is independent and autonomous. You are now outside the family bubble that has shaped your identity up until this point. You're pretty much whatever your parents wanted you to be, what Daddy saw for you, and after all, you are Daddy's Girl, right?

Daddy's Little Girl

You were likely born and raised under the patriarchy's umbrella of your father and his father, a universal cognitive schema that favors the masculine and oppresses the feminine.

If you had brothers, you likely noticed a difference in the parenting style toward your brother, including more freedom and choices for him to make for himself.

The patriarchal paradigm offers protection and leadership for females who are viewed as the weaker sex, and, unlike boys, girls need protection. From boys. Instead of protecting girls, a matriarchal paradigm might instead educate boys to respect girls in deep and meaningful ways, as the birthers, the nurturers, literally bringing the milk for humanity. If Daddys were to respect their wives and honor their children's mothers, a profound shift would certainly change the game for humanity. How things might shift if boys learned to honor their mothers, sisters, future girlfriends, and partners, rather than possessing or controlling them, as history has dictated.

Women could take their absolute rightful place as matriarchs, not under the guidance of Daddy but of equal import and power in decision-making in the family, the community, the state, the nation, and the whole frigging world. Imagine a world where men stop standing on the necks of women and reducing them to their private parts and their procreation skills.

Yes, you can bring home the bacon and fry it up in a pan before you kick off your shoes and take off your bra, but why would you want to do that anymore? Why not take your skills somewhere they're valued, and you are as well? Have dinner with the girls on the way home from work, then it's self-care until bedtime!

Balance your self-care and nurturance with the assholery of the patriarchy. It's likely that if you were raised in Sunday School, you've been brainwashed to believe that Eve screwed everything up for all of humanity and that football season is a man's sacred right to Sunday afternoons and Thursday nights. You may not have yet discovered your voice; you may not feel that you have experienced oppression, objectification, or being patronized or harassed.

Yeah, You Have. You Have.

Girls are molded to comply, and if you continue to give over your voice into adulthood, you have been oppressed. If you don't embrace feminism, you have been marginalized and oppressed. Would a mentally healthy woman give her uterus to a man for safekeeping or be in favor of relinquishing her freedom in caring for her uterus?

Brainwashed ones, Kool-Aid-drinking ones, the good girls of the world eager to serve and self-sacrifice. Water-bearers. Perhaps the conditioning starts in girlhood, making 'yes' seem more rewarding, pleasing, and compliant. More yessing makes Daddy happier, which makes you happier. Everybody is happier.

Your smile is the cherry on top!

Getting better at setting boundaries by saying 'no' is paramount to leaving Daddy. Many girls and women struggle to set boundaries with boys and men. You aim to please many times (every time?)!

Daddy did nothing but make you sharp in the 'bring me a beer' department, or the 'make me some nachos,' or 'do whatever I need to be pleased' category of courtship.

Call it people pleasing, being a good girlfriend, wife, mother, or homeschooler; all are part of girl grooming for wifehood. Daddy doesn't need an independent woman; he needs one with childbearing hips and a good smile.

Asserting one's own needs and speaking up for oneself, saying 'no' can be difficult for many women who want to please their partner or family. Too often, wives and mothers end up with too much on their plates and no time for themselves to breathe. Because saying 'no' and setting boundaries is clearly problematic for many women, a study was conducted on how to best say 'no.'

Research determined this magic phrase that gets you off the hook: I won't be able to do that.

It's the best way to decline a request. It's distinguishable from 'I can't do that' as people tend to accept it instead of attempting to persuade you. Practice saying, 'I won't be able to do that,' in front of a mirror. This practice will light up more areas of your brain as you create new neural pathways in the Art of No, thereby making it easier and more memorable for the next time you need to say, 'I won't be able to do that.'

It is incredibly liberating to say no and have space for yourself, rather than sacrificing your own space. Regularly saying no is a must in the ongoing discovery of You; saying no to another is difficult for anyone raised to believe that it's more 'blessed' to give than receive; however, there's no stipulation as to whom to give.

A fresh idea would be to give all that good stuff to yourself, to you, especially if you experience knee-jerk people-pleasing behavior. Raise your hand if you're more particular about meeting his needs than your own.

Saying, 'I won't be able to do that' to Daddy is enormous! It could go against all your previous training for wifehood. Saying no to Daddy is momentous and saying it often is transformative.

Because saying no to Daddy is saying 'yes' to You - the only person in charge of your happiness.

Whatever you do, don't feel guilty for prioritizing taking charge! Don't be intimidated by those who would hold you back and silence your assertiveness. Who else knows what lies in your best interest? Who else knows your heart and its desires? Who else is going to choose your happiness?

And figuring out what 'taking care of you' looks like can be an excellent adventure! What did you like to do when you were a kid? When were you happiest? Do you remember? What music or hobby? What sport or club? What books? What television shows and characters? What music? What artists? Who inspires you? What badass woman is showing up for herself in a way you love and want to imitate - the highest form of flattery?

Saying Yes to Him

Have you ever considered what 'yes' implies in response to his marriage proposal?

'Why yes! Of course, I will marry you!

I'll take your name and identity, quit my job or redirect my career path for you, move across the country for you, leave my friends,

carry your child,

birth her,

raise her,

I will sacrifice years of career building, and when my nest is empty, and only then,

might I ask myself if

I am happy …'

This is his unconscious hoped-for response.

In the current American culture, even if the above is not explicitly stated, it is implied in your 'yes.' It's the job description of 'wife' and often includes additional work outside the home as well.

Don't sign up for that.

Say no and set boundaries often. Practice! Because saying no is a challenge for some women, and it's a skill that can be developed, practiced, and improved upon. Set an intention to say, 'I won't be able to do that' or 'No, thanks' every single day in one way or another until you no longer feel awkward setting that boundary.

Girls' programming is about being sweet and compliant - a good hostess, mother, etc., essentially a 'yes person.' Keep the yes, but to you and what you want, including protecting your space, privacy, finances, conversations, pussy (your holy of holies), and you get it.

Say Yes! to You

Acting as a 'yes woman' is exhausting and repressing. Chances are, you are more aware of the task at hand than your male supervisor. Don't you know an Executive Assistant who runs the whole department while making it his idea? You know why.

Instead of an immediate (habitual) yes, consider the new and improved response: ...' Let me get back to you on that' ... as you take a minute to consider the request. Does it interest or benefit you in any way? And how might you best represent yourself in the answer? Thinking it through and weighing it out gives you a choice instead of a habitual 'yes' response. Breaking the impulse to please takes time and effort, but mostly it takes practice.

Additionally, learning to ask for credit or recognition is a valuable skill to develop going forward. Don't be afraid to represent yourself. Does this sound selfish? Do men feel selfish for prioritizing their needs? Think about it. Feeling guilty for taking care of yourself is straight from the patriarchal mindset. How dare you put anything before Daddy?

Guilt is a useless emotion that serves no purpose other than making you suffer. Taking care of yourself and your happiness ought never to make you feel guilty. Any man who would judge you for prioritizing yourself deserves nothing more than being window-shopped. Just walk on by and keep walking.

It's interesting how prioritizing yourself can bring feelings of distress!

Mama says, 'Girl, take care of yourself! Wash your face, put on some music, breathe, drink some water … sit down … how are you feeling now?'

The Superwoman Myth

A flawless patriarchal conditioning that seems to peak during motherhood is the idea of being a Super Mom. Being revered for over-functioning, mothers do it all. Women who become mothers are masters of self-sacrifice while multitasking for a family of four. Or 12.

Supermom keeps the family systems running smoothly while meeting the emotional needs of children and husbands, and less so her own. The biological impulse to create and nurture babies is natural and beautiful. It happens to some, but not all, women. 'Motherhood' has been captured and harnessed by the patriarchy and reinterpreted as some obligation of womankind - another lie perpetuated through the centuries, an attempt to control or harness the magic of the portal.

Go with Gusto Instead

Since you are the only human being alive responsible for your happiness, please practice pursuing it robustly! Look for the courage to pursue experiences that crash through fear and containment. Find your bliss and follow it happily. Be big, spread out.

You cannot be contained.

You are so much more than the box you came in, so feel free to kick those cardboard walls down. Or curl up inside them until you're ready. That day will come if you continue to listen and look for your voice. Your gut will never mislead you because she is anchored in Mother Nature's matrix of energetic connection.

Your gut is tapped in! You can trust her.

Chapter 2 Playlist

Know No (Chinchilla)

thank you, next (Ariana Grande)

My House (Beyoncé)

FOH (iyla)

Cinderella Snapped (Jax)

Man's World (MARINA)

Chapter 2 Self-Care Recommendation

Baths of every kind: salt, baking soda, Epsom salts, herbs, flowers, mud, steam, sound/with candles, music, a waterproof vibrator, bubbles, toys, meditation lighting - remember the water - you floated in utero, completely self-contained and wholly provided for instantaneously. Water is a healing agent and is essential for both internal and external health.

Pampering: massage, facial, manicure/pedicure, and body treatments such as chiropractic, acupuncture, naturopathy, aromatherapy, and reflexology - Mother Nature encourages nurturance for all her children, regardless of species. Spa day or treatment, gifts you give yourself - anything you want within your budget.

Treat yourself the way you want to be treated by your lover. Want to be pampered? Pamper yourself. Want to be touched? Get a massage and take in the experience of being touched with good boundaries, nothing expected in return, except maybe a nice tip.

Note how your body takes in another person's touch, energy, or vibe. Allow your stress to dissipate as you exhale. If this causes you significant discomfort, it could be a sign of something needing attention. Pursuing a 'medical massage' could feel safer if you have trauma around physical boundaries. A good massage therapist will be sensitive to your request for good boundaries or that you have discomfort issues. Massage is intimate. Maybe intimacy hasn't been a safe place for you.

Getting regular massages with a trusted massage therapist can bring deep healing to the body's memories that are separate from yours. You must permit it by dropping your defenses, allowing yourself to be touched in a healthy way with boundaries that respect you.

You are a Queen. Mother Nature's daughter ... treat yourself accordingly.

Bedtime rituals - are you a good sleeper? Good sleep hygiene is crucial for a good night's sleep. What are your specific habits, behaviors, and environmental factors surrounding going to bed at night? Exploring this area of your day/night will give insight into how you might improve your sleep.

Being intentional about sleep is a good start.

If you're a mom, consider how you put your children to bed, with considerable pomp and circumstance that, after teeth brushing, includes at least one story and lots of snuggles.

You can put yourself to bed in a similar fashion, giving attention to your needs with care and love. Having a set bedtime that you deviate from by no more than one hour helps establish the circadian rhythms that optimize functioning.

Perfect harmony. You, living in your body in this space and time, and taking care of it while simultaneously wielding creative energy for the well-being of people around you.

That's what you do every day because you are a woman. You bring the vibes.

Your pet! OMG, your pet. If you don't have one, you might consider getting one. Are you a dog person or a cat person? Or a rabbit person? Or lizard? Snuggling your pet is a reliable source of dopamine hits. You are an ESH or Emotional Support Human. Take that seriously, as your sweet pet loves you unconditionally - something few humans can offer.

Your relationship with your pet will allow you to exercise love and boundaries with an adoring entity. Learn to be a pet whisperer, if you're not already, by looking and listening to your fur baby. You reap good benefits from any love you generate.

STEP 3:

Quit Church

Religion is control. Religion is misogynistic. Full stop.

In all of the world's major religions, except the Baha'i Faith and Hinduism, women are not represented equitably, nor are they particularly valued. If it weren't for supporting roles, usually screwing up like Eve did in the Garden, Delilah in cutting Samson's hair, and Edith, who disobeyed her husband, Lot, and turned into a pillar of salt, they wouldn't be remembered at all.

Like the saying, 'Good girls don't make history,' these women are remembered for their mistakes, for misbehaving, and they're probably still waiting for their stories to be told.

The masculine 'choice' has been to suppress the feminine and her offering from the very beginning. The lie perpetuated within most world religions of male superiority, leadership, and the suppression of the feminine is a travesty to the Universe.

The late beloved President Jimmy Carter said it best:

"The truth is that male religious leaders have had - and still have - an option to interpret holy teachings either to exalt or subjugate women. They have, for their own selfish needs, overwhelmingly chosen the latter."

Have you felt exalted or subjugated in your life with Daddy? Take some time to think about that.

What Helen Keller Thought

Suspend your preconceived notions about god momentarily, the one you learned about in Sunday School and church. Expand your consciousness to the edge of the universe and consider 'god' differently from your current concept. Let a non-image of god permeate your psyche. Not a person but a force. A force of nature. Mother Nature.

Like doubting Thomas, you're allowed to wonder and ask questions.

Before Helen Keller was 2 years old, she lost the ability to see, hear, and speak. Her life story of connecting, first with her teacher, Anne Sullivan, and then with the outside world via understanding what words represent, is a story of breakthrough resilience.

Years later, reflecting on her coming out of the darkness of her early experiences of being trapped inside herself, she described memories that were all sensory, experiencing the world through the touch of her fingers, the smells, and the 'feels.' There was no imagery, no visual in her mind's eye, as there was no understanding of words or language.

Although she did not have a preconceived notion of 'god' because she was never taught about it in church, when asked about her belief in god, she stated that she became aware of 'it' early in her life through sensory experiences in nature. She experienced the presence, the energy, the force, the Love that is universally understood as god. She said although she didn't know what It was called, she knew It was there and could feel Its presence.

Without Sunday School.

Why not allow your thoughts and feelings about truth and god and love to emerge (if you haven't already) instead of accepting the canned version of a patriarchal bent you've been fed in church?

Like Helen Keller, you don't need the stories from Daddy's perspective to have a connection to god. Or goddess, or higher power, the universe, or any of the other names for a spiritual teaching or deity. This 'force of (Mother) nature' is felt and understood universally, and many stories and interpretations have evolved regarding it.

The stories morph between cultures, languages, and history, always filtered through a masculine lens. The thread of truth runs through all things: a vibration, a force, 'chi,' or love. Yet, there are many varied translations of this vibration and the stories surrounding it.

What would a feminine paradigm shift yield for the planet?

So. . . Nobody Knows Shit

Some human beings (mostly men) have compiled teachings from Great Masters (primarily men) and interpreted those messages to humanity since time began. Awareness and acknowledgment of a greater being or 'god' is traced back to cave people, and the obsession and compulsion to communicate with it and about it, to try to understand and describe it, and to connect with it is part of a universal collective unconscious. Exploring spirituality on your own, meditating, reading, praying and listening to the 'still small voice' within could be your silent spiritual rebellion learning Mother Nature's rhythms as you tend both your soul's restoration and the earth's recovery.

Spirituality is free, and love is abundant. God is love. Remember?

The Patriarchal Playbook

Although spirit flows freely in the universe, attempts to regulate and control beliefs about it, and to use fear to manipulate it, are straight from the patriarchal playbook. Men empowered themselves with an imagined superiority and an inflated authority to make laws and rules to devalue and control women. Their stories devalue women and label them as sinners and of falling short of god's will, and their interpretations provide evidence of the misogynistic perspective informing Christianity. Misogyny and the control and suppression of women continue to be a worldwide preoccupation of the patriarchy.

The hurt, the persecution, and the control are all designed to punish women, define them as baby-makers, and ensure Daddy's needs are met. Failure at redemption equates to eternal damnation.

Again, compelling motivation for compliance.

Have them babies, raise them to have more babies, and don't forget to tithe because Father Time encourages monetization. Time is money, and voilà, it's a supply and demand, and a golden handcuff situation. And just like that, some man like Joel Osteen monetizes these human obsessions to feel or know god, and they become multi-millionaires. Praise god!

Break Free

Free yourself from the religious rules that don't feel right. Listen to your heart and trust it. Practice your prayers and meditations instead of those spoken by Daddy. It can be challenging to preserve the baby as you toss out the baptismal waters.

It can feel scary to address the fear that came with your religion and heartbreaking to discover the lies you've been told.

Time itself wears a patriarch's beard. Father Time looms over your biological clock, his hourglass draining your life into countable units. 'Passing time' versus being present. 'Making time' instead of living. The rubric of tyranny is broken down into minutes, days, and years. Racing. Counting. Producing.

Simply existing outside this matrix of productivity becomes an act of rebellion.

Where's the Love?

The patriarchal messages became scriptures, and the stories became parables. Divinity was assigned, and deities were created - all serving the architects of religion.

Control of poor people, control of women, keeping people fearful of their mortality, and promising all the things like streets of gold (the Yellow Brick Road?) and many mansions, or 50 virgins, or the horrible reverse threat of eternal damnation - falling in a bottomless pit of burning fire:

a compelling reason to tithe 10 percent and stay in an abusive marriage with a controlling, alcoholic, violent misogynist!

Mother Nature would never advise that; only a 'water-bearer' mother would ask her daughter to stay in a marriage with a misogynist. A loving mother wants her daughter to be loved and respected, not controlled and enslaved by a man who would use her for cheap labor and childbearing skills or to boss her around and wear on his arm like eye candy, then hold her in contempt for being attractive.

That's not love. Do you see or feel that? Maybe you do, but the fear of hell's fire and eternal damnation is a potent motivator and useful in manipulating and controlling others. But fear is not love, and if you're afraid, you're not in a loving relationship.

There is no love (god) where there is fear.

Fear is used to control, and fear of hell is disseminated to girls in vacation bible school like cinnamon streusel oatmeal. With a steady diet of fear and the anxiety to be good enough, daughters try for unattainable perfection. What sweet and earnest ambitions for little Sunday school girls to aspire to live without sin. Even if you were motivated by fear of hell, you prayed hard, read your Bible, and were kind to others, how did you feel when you learned that your 'righteousness is as dirty rags?'

Were you hooked on Vacation Bible School with the fun arts and crafts and the stories of Jesus and his mother, Mary? And the other Mary, Mary Magdalene, the redeemed whore who hung out with Jesus, enjoyed wine with him, and later, washed and dried his feet with her hair.

Now that's intimate. What actually happened there?

Whose Feet Would You Dry with Your Hair?

What's her story? Mary Magdalene. Had it been told, what might have been the impact on the trajectory of male/female relationships? A deep dive into her intimate connection with the son of god could have rewritten history, an antithesis to the patriarchal paradigm. The focus is on Jesus' life of performing miracles and teaching the masses, feeding and healing them, and his relationship with his bros, the disciples, with little to no inclusion of the female perspective, input, and contribution. If Jesus had been a family man, and his respect for females was documented by the women in his life, perhaps toxic masculinity would not be a thing today. Perhaps men would gain a better understanding of relationships and value women as partners and brilliant innovators, holding them in the utmost respect as keepers of the sacred portals and gateway to all of life.

Imagine if those stories were retold and interpreted through the collaboration of female voices, rather than being suppressed or excluded.

Was Mary Magdalene's value in the story of Jesus assigned by men who viewed and judged her by her profession? Similarly, there's no information on Mother Mary's pregnancy; would not information about her carrying the son of god yield some valuable insights about gestating a deity or a regular human being? Imagine if those stories were retold and interpreted through the collaboration of female voices, rather than their suppression or exclusion.

A Female Perspective

Mary's story of Jesus' birth might change everything about the current state of 'masculinity.' A whole new accounting of the event, and without an epidural, Mary would likely remember everything. Her raising Jesus is not the focus of attention, but she was there when he died.

Both Marys were there.

Where was Joseph? Why is his absence from his son's crucifixion not an issue? Was he installing cabinets? And why didn't Adam take responsibility for his choice in the Garden of Eden? True to patriarchal form, the storybook blames Eve for that whole apple debacle, forever placing her, the mother of humanity, as the 'sinner,' the inferior partner, the weaker sex who needs direction and protection from and by the same man.

The same man who listened to her musings about apples and strayed from the mission manifesto to tend to the garden. Eve got snaked, then she snaked Adam.

Question:

Why didn't Adam go straight to god on Eve's behalf? Why didn't he, like a decent man, ask god for advice and mercy on the issue of the bitten apple? Where was his counsel to Eve about how she had screwed up? And how even though he, too, wanted a taste, his mouth was watering, and he was feeling thirsty ... why didn't he man up and say:

'Hey, Eve, Babe, we need to talk to god about this - and he's a loving god and all, I bet he'll cut us some slack or something ... I got this. Come on, hold my hand, I'll talk and present our case to Daddy upstairs.'

Nope. If only. Adam ate the apple at Eve's direction (proving her leadership skills) and then blamed her for it all. Everybody did. The rest is history, religion, and the desire to control you. The Big Daddy in the sky, controlling your body and your sexuality. Wanting you and then shaming you for it.

All this is to say you don't need it. Your connection to whatever is Love and Intelligence is inherent in your existence. You don't have to work for it or earn it. You just have to realize it. Remember it. Claim it. Be it and live it.

Release the ticking 'time bomb' of the masculine construct, and as you exhale, release the stress and relax, noticing the calm. Feel a sensation of a warm welcome; you're floating in the rhythmic spiral of upward and outward consciousness growth. Expansion. The womb. Let this be your new baseline and come back to this feeling often as you reset your nervous system.

Stevie Wonder said in 1999 at the Super Bowl Halftime show,

"It ain't about religion; it's about relationship."

Goddamn, Stevie, yes.

The relationship. Love. Ditch religion. Find Love instead. Find yourself, the Love of Your Life. Quit religion and find Spirituality. Value your inner Eve, the mother of humanity. All mankind was born of the vagina.

Quit Church, Not Spiritual Practice.

Step outside the box they gave you. Stand arms-wide in a victory pose. Invite all the loving vibes that belong to you to come your way. Eventually, you can work on forgiving and letting go of resentment of the control, the tiny box, and not having a voice. But for now, BE You.

Feel all your feelings, even the most uncomfortable ones … it won't kill you: fear, emotional pain, betrayal, rage, sadness, so much sadness. Identify the predominant emotion, such as fear of hell, sadness from family rejection, or feeling invisible inside your box. Focus on the emotion and feel it intensely for a moment. Breath into it … it's not you, it's an adaptation to survive. A defense. Breathe and release it with your exhale. Feel the negative emotion leave you as you release it. Notice feeling lighter or relieved. Now, what would make you feel okay right now? Once you figure that out, do that thing.

Repeating this action will help regulate your nervous system. It can expand your control of your emotions - making you unshakeable.

Sound unfamiliar? It's flat-out scary, but remember, God is Love. Spirit/consciousness permeates the human psyche. Feel the emergence (finally) of the Divine Feminine energy all around you. A shift is occurring as the old systems crash and burn; a new future is unveiling itself through women. Focus on that. Meditate on its meaning. What qualities do you embody that vibe with the 'Future is Female'? You, together with your sisters - seen and unseen - are ushering in this shift in process.

Yes, a woman can be spiritual, even Christian, and not go to church. She can be her High Priestess. Can you...Pray your own prayers?... Feel your god essence?... Do you tend to your loving vibe on your own? Do you currently have a spiritual practice? Has it changed with adulthood? Are you out of the box? If so, how'd you get out? Did your mother, grandmother, or great-grandmother, who was feisty and independent, encourage you? What has been the maternal contribution to your spiritual growth?

Womankind Cannot be Contained.

The attempt has the planet in a world of hurt. The suppression of the feminine is THE biggest problem with symptoms everywhere: wars, poverty, disease, ignorance, corruption, and the well-being of Mother Earth herself is at grave risk because of MANkind.

Decisions have been made for centuries behind closed doors in rooms empty of women and devoid of the female perspective; votes have been taken, and decisions made without a maternal perspective. The supreme arrogance of patriarchal dominance is embarrassing, yet even today, there are men (mostly white) who have appointed themselves the deciders of women's fates and the fate of humanity. And the planet.

Oh, the karma that misguidance has produced worldwide. Humanity is on the brink of extinction with the touch of a man's finger. Still, the Old Guard fights to keep women in the kitchen, barefoot and pregnant, denying the damage it has caused generations of people and the planet itself. Wars are generated (by rich men) and fought (by poor men) with obscene profits making rich men richer; religion is written and enforced by men; politics is driven by men, primarily white men in this country, who make the laws, set precedents, and are the face of the nation - all evil Daddys interested in acquiring more money and power to dominate the world.

Women who have lived these truths long enough are currently empowered with the wit and will to win. Every woman, whether she recognizes it or not, is being challenged with expanding her autonomy within her sphere. The chrysalis is cramping your style. Your wings are aching to expand, and your antennae are ready to pick up the frequency.

Since the patriarchy is not opening the door for you, and you're clear on that now, just bust out of that cocoon, step around, and over, and stay out of reach of Daddy. Believe in your ability to think and feel for yourself and to decide what's best for you and, of course, the care and feeding and maintenance of you. It's okay, even advisable, to take responsibility for yourself as soon as possible after your 18th birthday. Unless there's a problem with your readiness, once you've finished school, getting a full-time job and being off the parents' payroll is the first order of business. Supporting yourself affords you all the freedom to Be Yourself.

Want to stop wearing underwear? Feel free!

Love doesn't change. Daddy loves you no matter where you live, and if he doesn't, it's not love at all, unfortunately. Love equals freedom and acceptance. Not control and dominance.

As painful as it is, cutting Daddy off completely is a necessary evil for some women. If there is a continued attempt to control you despite your adulthood and grown-ass womanhood, you might have to put distance between you.

This is exceedingly difficult for someone who has always been the Good Girl, the rule follower, only to realize that the rules are not in her best interest.

It's a devastating realization. If ignorance is bliss, awareness is excruciating. You may feel gutted by a world that only slightly makes a place for you. Or maybe you're suffocating in the box that's your relationship with Daddy, and you're too afraid to break down the walls. Because greater awareness equals greater pain, and feeling profoundly the hurt and rage, you might wonder … how the hell does any woman come back from this?

Expressing these emotions gets labelled as pathology - crazy, sick, hysterical - totally bereft of compassion or understanding … It's as if they've never experienced the notion of their balls on a chopping block. The patriarchal manifesto prioritizes penile genital superiority, complete with phallus worship demonstrated in architecture, scientific exploration, and military parades.

Imagine a Matriarchal Paradigm

In your mind's eye, imagine listening to the hum of Mother Nature's pulse. How might that sound or feel? Expanding into that imagining, feel the environment 'breathing' or vibing, and notice the interchange between 'it' and you. How would your life change if sequential time morphed into a gentle, gradual leveling up - a spiral orientation of continuously becoming your True Self?

Absorbing and appreciating the cycles and rhythms of growth; realizing it's less about checking boxes and more about gaining experience; less about productivity, and more about discovering who you are and what you want to do/be/accomplish with this grand experience of living in this moment during a historic shift in culture. That took some planning. You're not here by accident. You have premier tickets to the interactive transformation from patriarchal dominance to a more perfect union of humanity, as Mother Nature, Mother Gaia, created. Becoming aware of the transformation is a form of participating in it. Stake your claim. Realizing who you are and what you're offering to the good of the collective is your job. Expanding your happiness is your mission.

But first, you must clean house.

Consider how Mother Nature would deep clean earth; the 'move-in-ready' clean, a purge of what no longer serves, and an 'under new management' kind of clean.

Planet Earth Chore List:

1. Empty/dispose/repurpose Earth's trash

2. Sweep/mop/clean Earth's floors

3. Wash/dry and replace dirty, old, or broken things, and anything stuck in the past Earth

Voila! A whole, new planet-body!

As the ultimate matriarchal archetype, how would Mother Nature make you over? What shifts would happen because of her help or encouragement? First, she would set you free, of course. Mother Nature promotes pursuing happiness, which provides intrinsic success; so, where would you go and what would you create? Completely different from a fat bank account and a jam-packed resume of corporate success, Mother Nature reminds you that the pursuit of money does not bring lasting happiness. Why does the patriarchy continue to promote it?

Pray your own prayers, feel your divine essence, and cultivate your loving vibe. Recognizing your contribution to raising the consciousness of this country and the world is a key goal in pursuing happiness and health. Realizing your happiness and pursuing it can happen simultaneously. You, Mother Nature, and Earth, vibing to the goodness existing in the universe. Peace, calm, and harmony - and Mother Nature smiles. And wins.

Here Comes Momma

Take it one day at a time, step by step, starting with finding a therapist, if need be (you must have a good gut feeling about your therapist), who will help unravel the obstacles to finding your voice.

Healing happens in layers. The enormity of realizing that men you know, even your father, don't believe you are worthy of governing your own body, of making your own decisions, or navigating your own life. The women who are willing to sacrifice autonomy first to their father, then to a husband, (and maybe a second one) have yet to discover their voice and value outside the 'helpmate' role.

Think about it:

Is it the beautiful gown, the updo, the diamond, the flowers, the family and friends, and the community honoring you on your special day... the day you are given away by your father to your husband? As in, your Daddy no longer possesses you; now you belong to your husband, your new Daddy. You become a Mrs. Someone Else, claimed by a man who is taking you off the market of available heifers, females for the picking for slave labor and breeding purposes.

You are the Belle of the Ball. (Maybe for the first time in your life?) A Bride. It's intoxicating and exhilarating. The first dance with Daddy, who, after a few twirls, passes you to your husband; symbolism not lost. Unfortunately for many women, dancing slows to a screeching halt within the first year of marriage. Once pregnancy is achieved and the family's needs take center stage, self-sacrifice kicks in, and dancing becomes an occasional 'girls' night' activity.

Please dance again for yourself. Listen to Pink and dance again.

Imagine a completely different scenario. One where you prioritize your happiness instead of handing it over to Prince Charming, your husband. It's not his job to make you happy, and after the honeymoon is over, he likely won't give it a second thought. Why should he? He already bought the damn cow! Why not pursue your autonomy, happiness, and a career path while married? Instead of focusing on keeping his dinner warm, find something that brings a sense of meaning, earns you some money, and ensures your independent living and decision-making. You are your own person.

Be selective in developing your posse, and, of course, vet any man you're considering granting portal passage to. Again, getting therapy helps develop skills in cultivating friendships with good boundaries and relationships. Healthy relationships require healthy boundaries. It's what protects you from over-exposure and over-functioning. If you are working to find your voice and locate your Self as the Love of Your life, look no further than inside.

Do you remember a time when you were blissed out all on your own?

Stop and think:

What was happening? Where were you and how old were you? Can you find that bliss again? Can you recreate it? Can you feel the connection to yourself, like a relationship that is intimately personal and accepting? You loving You.

Chapter 3 Playlist

Never Gonna Not Dance Again (Pink)

Church Girl (Beyoncé)

God is a Woman (Ariana Grande)

Thank Goddess (Qveen Herby)

Boys Will Be Boys (Dua Lipa)

Chapter 3 Self-Care Suggestions

Read for entertainment, enjoyment, and education. Feminist authors might excite you on this quest for liberation: poetry, erotica, cookbooks, self-help, mystery, romance, and travel.

Stimulate your mind with research on women's roles in different cultures and female contributions to history, culture, science, and the arts.

What about the women in your family tree? Do you have a Wild Woman Great-Great Grandma? What is the legacy of the women in your family history? How much familial or marital repression did they suffer? What kind of generational trauma can you identify?

Beautify your sanctuary. Whether you have a corner, a closet, a room, an apartment, a house, or a mansion, your space is a refuge. It’s where you rest and recharge. It’s where the magic happens, both inside you and in the external environment.

Create a space that is a place of beauty. Use colors that you love, symbols that are meaningful to you, art that you make or collect on the walls, and plants or pets that add love and oxygen to the space! This is your temple, where you live, move, and have your Being.

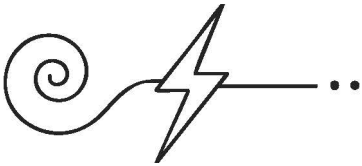
Shifting from religious rules to spiritual exploration encourages you to honor yourself as a spiritual being. When you start paying attention, you will find love and validation everywhere as the universe conspires to promote your happiness. The more you notice and accept the universe's goodness, the more you manifest it!

It’s science and the quantum field.

Keep a dream journal. Become more attuned to the signs and symbols that occur around you daily. Look up the symbols in your dreams on a site with dream interpretation, like dreamdictionary.org or Auntyflo.com. Dreams are a frequent offering from the inner workings of your psyche, and once viewed with curiosity, can become a guide in your daily life. So MUCH to explore in the uncharted territory of your psyche. A dream is like a painting; each image carries symbolic meaning.

Write on the mirror in red lipstick:

I AM THE LOVE OF MY LIFE



STEP 4:

Make Money

There’s nothing more liberating than having your own money. The ability to get what you want when you want it is a high. Daddy no longer holds your purse or controls your bank. No need to ask or explain to anyone what you want, whether it’s this, that, or the other thing.

You want it? You get it! Feeling the power of getting what you want and learning to discipline your inner kid (who wants everything) is a maturing process. It’s liberating to have your own, as money equals power in this culture. Having your own money sets you free to think for yourself and make decisions in your best interest, without coercion, manipulation, or ulterior motives.

Talking about feeling good as hell! That first paycheck with a comma is exhilarating!

How is this achieved? Can you monetize your time to do what you enjoy doing? Start there! Of course, monetizing anything is initially considered a masculine pursuit, but girls are players too. Hard work saves your ass, but getting paid for what you love? That's thriving! Give yourself the green light to pursue bliss in a job or a career that ensures happy money-making ventures for you.

It's OKAY to love your work and choose a job that brings meaningfulness and a paycheck. Do not believe the lie that your creative side won't make money. If your creative side brings you bliss, the money will follow, said some famous old white guy.

Working a job or being paid for your time evolves as you mature and gain a deeper understanding of yourself. You are really good at something. Figure out what if you don't already know, and here's a hint ... what do you love to do? What gets your motor running? Regardless of your income source, the result is the same - money in your bank account.

The ultimate flex is loving your work.

Next-level living is not immediately attainable right off the Daddyship. Supporting yourself is the first goal, followed by identifying your bliss and maneuvering toward it. Since this covers the meaning of life - finding and sharing your bliss - pursuing it is sanctioned by the goddesses and blessed by Mother Nature. What more validation do you need?

If you have always longed to be a mother, find a decent feminist male to father your children. You will then be less likely to follow conventional American households where the division of labor between mothers and fathers is massively disproportionate. Working a full-time job does not excuse you from caregiving at the end of the day, and being a 'good dad' is a much lower bar. If you live in such a household and are exhausted, the antidote is to increase self-care exponentially; please stop doing everything for everyone. Have a family meeting and offer options for increasing chore contributions or ponying up to hire help. It's a fair choice: Participate in the work or hire it out and pay for it. (Notice that as a wife, you are not compensated for this work. Ever.) While some men respond well to requests for picking up the chore pace, talk is cheap, and change is more complicated. Conflict-avoidant men often make empty promises to placate or silence you, then never man up to the responsibility. Changing the behavior is the proof in the pudding, and without change, you have to ask: 1) Is he unwilling or unable to follow through? And 2) How many rounds of this dance are you down for? Maybe it's time to realize you are the workhorse to which he has harnessed his energy? Old school, dinosaur mentality, and so passé.

Ain't Nobody Got Time for Dat

Again, imagine if instead of pouring energy into the well-being of others, you pour all that love and attention into little ole you: procure creature comforts and pursue education, self-care, travel, learn a skill or a language, and develop your mind and heart.

Making money and creating the life you want, including taking care of your environment and creating a place of refuge, can be an oasis to return to from a harsh world. Working outside the home generally provides the most significant financial security. Maintaining control of your finances and learning how to manifest your goals will give you a growing sense of confidence. Making decisions in your own best interest gets easier the more you practice!

You may be rearranging dynamics in additional relationships besides the one with Daddy. Breaking generational curses around patriarchal thinking might be met with resistance and judgment from circles you previously enjoyed. You might feel like a stranger to your friends and family. You may be creating a new circle, even a new family, the 'chosen' family in adulthood, rather than the one that gave you a navel.

If this is the case, take heart in the realization that what is meant for you will not pass you by; you are in manifesting mode. As the Love of Your Life, you are creating a template of self-care that any future partner must respect and encourage. Cutting off family members is a serious decision with far-reaching repercussions and is generally not advised unless you need to for your survival or to thrive.

It's about your life and happiness. Your path.

The importance of financial independence cannot be overstated. Avoid the inheritance carrot, the threat of financial ruin because of divorce, or worse, staying in an unsatisfactory or abusive marriage for fear of poverty or living under a bridge.

If this is a fear, you have likely been gaslit. All of this can be avoided with your financial independence. You can have dinner and a movie with a girlfriend anytime you wish.

You can buy expensive snacks at the theatre. You can buy the shoes you like. DoorDash for dinner if you want, and Netflix.

It's all your choice when you have your own money.

Having your own space, a place you call home, with all the creature comforts you choose and carte blanche on your self-care and maintenance is top-tier BOSS energy! The cozy bed of your choosing with the covers that hold you close and secure like a swaddled baby is waiting for you at the end of your day. Maybe have a cat. Or a puppy to snuggle for that endorphin rush of unconditional love.

Consider this:

Don't believe what you hear about needing a man. You have YOU!

Refer to Chapter 1 for education/training for a profession, career, or job path. Become experienced in your chosen field and work toward expert status - even if only in your mind!

Striking a balance between living life today and strategizing for tomorrow. Research how to save and invest, and find ways to build wealth through passive income sources. Start small and be consistent.

Watch everything grow - mostly you in confidence and prowess!

Be selective about your circle. You need a tight inner posse that promotes your growth and emergence as the Boss of your life, as the Love of Your Life. Feel free to cultivate thousands of followers or friends on social media but reveal your vulnerabilities and plans only to the core group of women you know want the best for you. This can take years to realize, so be patient as you learn the difference between friends, lovers, and your posse.

Never, under any circumstances, give or loan money to a person you're dating or fucking. Period. Don't put purchases on a credit card on his behalf. This needs no further explanation: You do not want to pay interest on a man in whom you have lost interest. A man who needs you to finance him or his 'thing' or pay his way does not have the energy you need to partner up. At the same time, do not look to a boyfriend to finance you or your 'thing' as that sets up an 'I owe you' situation, giving him the control he likely already takes.

Keep the playing field as level as possible when getting to know a new Daddy, as they potentially have much in common with all Daddys. Don't think of a new Daddy as your protector, guide, or mentor, as you are those things for yourself. It's okay to make more, do more, and be better at your job than your Daddy. Don't think twice about it - with any luck, that is the case! Make no apologies; any complicated feelings Daddy may have are his to navigate.

Don't gloat but certainly don't hide. Be the strong, silent type - with your own money. Invest. Create passive income.

As your confidence grows, and it will, continue to focus on yourself, your growth, and your maturation. Study the consequences of your choices and be intentional with your precious energy.

Budgeting your money to cover necessities, plus a little fun, is becoming comfortable. You are responsible for yourself. Potential lovers will be drawn to you because of the powerful magnetic light shining through, and the quiet confidence you emanate. And self-love is magnetic. Calm energy is abundant energy. You will love the freedom.

Turns out that growing wealth is entirely possible, even if you came from humble beginnings. Maybe you didn't have an inheritance, or maybe Daddy wrote you off when you became your own person? It happens! Don't look to a man to build your fortune. You can do it. Believe it and plan it. You're a woman, the most resourceful creature alive! When you stop focusing on making a man happy and focus on making YOU happy, it's amazing what you can create! Like a fortune … if that's what you want.

You know exactly what to do.

Chapter 4 Playlist

Energy (Beyoncé)

Money (Cardi B)

My Power (Nija Charles, Beyoncé, Busiswa, Yemi Alade, Tierra Whack, Moonchild Sanelly, DJ Lag)

Bitch Better Have My Money (Rihanna)

Marie Antoinette (Qveen Herby)

Circus (Britney Spears)

Players (Coi Leray)

Chapter 4 Self-Care Suggestions

What's your sign? What rules your relationship with money or finance? Want insight?

Get your astrological chart done if you haven't. This is very interesting information that can inform you about your strengths, challenges, and your life's mission.

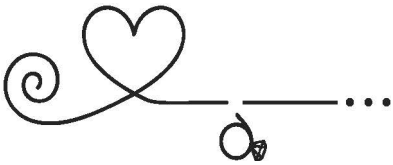
Knowledge is power; understanding the influence of the stars on you can be enlightening. At the very least, it's entertaining and makes good conversational material!

Don’t allow the patriarchy to pooh-pooh astrological interpretation as woo-woo. So, fucking what? … Do you see value in it? Only you can say for yourself. The stars have been a source of mystic wonderment since the beginning of time, and stargazers who read the constellations and interpret their influence are not a new phenomenon.

You decide for yourself.

But if you dabble, go deeper than your sun sign. Get your chart done by a professional astrologer for the educational experience. Guaranteed insight of one kind or another! Download Co-Star or a similar App that calculates your stars and go from there!

Happy Star Gazing into yourself!



STEP 5:

Take a Lover (Not a Husband)

Okay, take a breath. This is the sex and marriage section of this treatise. More sex and less marriage. There's much to be said and reiterated, imparted, and restated. And blown up. Starting with the traditional concept of marriage. Please suspend judgment and go with it for this reading.

Millions of girls are raised on the idea of being a wife and mother to a prince charming (in small letters). Maybe there's a reason the idea is promoted so early in the lives of girls. Baby girls playing with baby dolls. Maybe once a girl grows into a woman and thinks independently (which isn't always allowed), she will be less enthused by that unpalatable job description. Except for the immense personal growth gained in contributing to the development of a human being, and obviously the hugs and sweet love, there's no advancement, no pension, and certainly no paid time off or vacation time. Even worse, it's a thankless job except for a Sunday in May.

Being a mother is a fabulous undertaking, offering potential for a deeply spiritual connection and watching and contributing to a person's development, nurturing an intimate relationship, and encouraging the growth of their unique qualities and inherited attributes. It's as close to unconditional love as humans can achieve. A child being born to you is an awesome responsibility to usher that soul through the dependency part of their life without harm or damage.

This is not an easy undertaking to achieve and brings out the best and the worst in you.

A thankless job.

No pay, no power (except over children), no ability to effect change for yourself without disrupting an entire ecosystem built around your caregiving and self-sacrifice. A successful outcome of a 'stay-at-home' mom is the gut-wrenching departure of her dependents as they skip off into the sunset to pursue their dreams. (Or, for some girls, a husband like their mom found in Daddy.)

There is a case to be made for staying single. Do the research.

To break it down, marriage originated to guarantee offspring for a man. A Daddy would offer his daughter, along with a dowry (to sweeten the pot), to another Daddy who needed a woman to bear his children.

Love? Never part of the equation. Girls were traded between Daddys like breeding stock. And guess what ... they still are! Today, there are increasingly disturbing efforts to strip body autonomy from the individual woman in subjugation for patriarchal use.

Would Daddy do that? He would. He did.

It is hard to determine which came first, love or religion, impacting the 'institution' of marriage. The dowry becomes the cost of the wedding planned by the bride and paid for by Daddy as he gives her away to her intended - a bride to your future husband. Traditionally, Daddy pays for the wedding ceremony, add the patriarchal promise of 'protection' as asserted by religion (leadership, head of household, and all that crap), and suddenly you are boxed in 'till death do you part! 'To have and to hold,' 'for richer or poorer in sickness and health, till DEATH.'

Damn girl, ... what are you signing up for?

In retrospect, you clearly had no idea! Unpack that with a therapist, if need be, but in the meantime, consider this:

Is your mother happy? Was her mother?

This 'vow' seems to tie you to a man's life, karma, limitations, ambitions, or lack thereof. ... Is this the signing away of your autonomy? Your independence? Don't ask Daddy these questions; ask yourself! What are you gaining as a wife? What are you giving up? These are essential questions to ask yourself if you want to be free from Daddy. Don't jump into owning a frying pan.

You don't need a husband for that; defy the patriarchal religious rule of chastity until marriage and starting a family. Your vagina is your friend and is on your side. And she always has been.

If you were taught that sex is a sin, you may be lost in the patriarchal maze Daddy taught you. Let that bridge burn as you wake up to the reality of traditional marriage's aim for control of women. Transfer of power from Daddy to husband, the new Daddy, whose expectations of control are probably similar, even if unconscious. The audacity of the patriarchy is on full display.

Discovering your sexuality and embracing, reveling in, and enjoying it is essential to liberating yourself from the paradigm that has you trapped in servitude to Daddy. It's not rocket science to get to know your body, your vagina, and its accouterments like the clitoris.

Does this embarrass you? If so, stop what you're doing and get a mirror. You need to know your way around your lady bits. Figure it out. Spend some time there to familiarize yourself with your vagina. What's unique about her?

She can birth a whole human being for one thing.

Respect her. She's beautiful and functional, capable of ecstasy and agony. Don't dare call her ugly, or smelly, or nasty in any way. She's as beautiful as a Georgia O'Keeffe painting! And she and her sisters have populated the planet. She deserves your respect and appreciation. She will take you places you have never been and give you opportunities of a lifetime.

She is your portal, after all. Contemplate that.

Once you fully realize and appreciate the awesomeness that is your vagina, you will pause and ponder allowing access. Having (hopefully) learned what turns her on and how she likes to be stimulated, you are guaranteed an orgasm every single time you greet her!

It's easy to improvise, too, with toys and fantasy that give you the whole experience, albeit one-sided, at least it's Your Side! You will not be frustrated by an inept lover, a drunk husband, or a selfish dick! And best of all, you will owe nothing. You don't have to suck or fuck anything. You are a free agent. Still. Having just had an orgasm all on your own. Again.

Does this sound harsh? Bitter?

You won't get stuck at this place of self-love focus. But please stay long enough to learn your body, your vagina, and your needs both physically and emotionally, as you are providing for yourself in this self-pleasuring art form. When you are liberated from the belief that you need men for sex, you are free to be entirely yourself.

No more placating for your shot at doing what you want done. You just did it. Also, bring on the harshness if that's what it takes to represent yourself. Locate the anger, usually nestled right next to the pain; realizing Daddy doesn't know best, remember, there are layers of disappointment, sadness, and rage. To break free, the rage is good.

Anger is an art form, and losing control is calling your name.

Anger as a color - deep red, bright red, fire red, blood red - allows you to see red about the injustices you have experienced, the double standard, depreciation, the rape of body and mind, the emotional ravaging by inept Neanderthals who become Daddys.

What kind of arrogant ogre positions himself as superior to his wife, daughter, or 'any woman'?

Because of his testosterone? His penis? The global, universal promotion of masculine superiority over feminine is a falsehood that has ravaged humanity throughout the ages and today ravages the planet's very existence. Don't let it ravage you.

If you're reading these words, this message is specifically for YOU! Stop listening to Daddy.

Listen to you.

Sexual Consent

Have you ever contemplated the immense power of sexual consent? If women would only use the power of consent to protect themselves and their interests and send any man packing who is not on par with them, it could alter the current trajectory of the world!

If men only knew how often women had sex when they did not want to, were barely present, cried during or after, and were utterly frustrated by the selfishness of the man, they would be mortified by their complete lack of empathic connection while literally inside the women they claim to love. It's appalling and embarrassing for men.

How many times has that happened to you? How often do you do it when you don't want to? When is the last time you cried either during or after? Does he have any idea? When did you give up trying to get your needs met?

The meme that states that every woman has a scary man story is true. What is yours?

How do you give consent? The absence of 'no' is not 'yes,' so consider the power of your consent. What are you giving up? For whom? (because remember, you can take care of your own business - you don't need anyone for that) Is there respect for your voice? Are there mental stimulation and connection? Can you be vulnerable? How is he handling that? Are you ignoring red flags that require further investigation before granting access to your most holy of holies?

Erring on the side of caution would be a nice departure from pleasing Daddy just in case there is an expectation of you, likely your own. The generational habit of people-pleasing and the habitual nature of self-sacrifice that your mama taught you are deeply programmed.

The people-pleasing trait is taught to women by the patriarchal paradigm for men. Sugar, spice, etc. etc. Ever wonder why women are 'programmed' to please men, but men don't receive similar training to please women? Could it be a paradigm based on the superiority of the masculine and the 'servitude' position: the nurturer, the on-call one in case of emergency, the picker-upper of the pieces, the fuckbuddy, the mommy, the chief cook and bottle washer, the one who continues to sacrifice for the good of the whole. And so, it goes.

Rewrite Herstory

It's time to reorient. Mother Nature is adamantly calling on women to step up and refocus humanity on the feminine energy of love, a new undertaking. Feminine qualities of intuition, compassion, creativity, life-giving nurturance, receptivity, collaboration, emotional intelligence, connection to nature, inner peace and calm, flow and adaptability, wisdom, acceptance and forgiveness, sensuality, humility, patience, kindness and gentleness, self-love, and self-care are all vastly needed worldwide to give earth an inflight correction.

It's not selfish to love yourself; making that assertion is emotional manipulation or gaslighting. Shaming someone for loving herself is the epitome of the judgmental patriarchal need to control. Father Time would lock you in a paradigm of self-sacrifice and putting Daddy's needs above your own.

Women have taken the brunt of men's actions long enough. 'Look what she made me do ...' was born as a plausible explanation for a variety of sins or, as Taylor Swift calls it, 'bad male behavior' that women have tolerated and normalized since that bullshit Garden story.

There is plenty of mystery and magic in the universe without resorting to fables to control the masses, particularly the masses of women. Bad male behavior is being called out on a mass level, and it's about damn time.

As women claim power, the world will be transformed utilizing the above-mentioned qualities.

It's happening right now before our eyes. As you liberate yourself from Daddy, you join the ranks of Western Women saving the world, according to the Dalai Lama. You're embracing those divine feminine qualities inherent in who you are, when you are flowing with your authentic self, which impacts the current trajectory of mankind. Compassion begets compassion, intuition begets inclusivity, and so it goes to a more humane, peaceful, and bountiful world. There is enough for everyone. Only selflessness is missing. The Divine Feminine has arrived.

You are here.

Humanity is a family of beings invited to love and care for each other and our home, so that we can hand it over to the next generation of beings to love and care for. Consciousness expands when the body relaxes, and the same holds for the planet. When the Earth relaxes, planetary consciousness expands.

Womankind channeling Divine Feminine energy focuses on the health and well-being of children, education, safety, nurturing the environment, and tending to the needs of the family, the community, and the planet at large. Womankind is not about acquisition, competition, and domination. Womankind is about creating, cooperating, and nurturing. Women want to nurture things and watch them grow, to beautify them, and to share them with others. Women are born to create. Making babies is fundamental; that is, no skill is required. Any 10-year-old girl who menstruates can build and birth a baby. At 10 years old, she already possesses the gateway between non-existence and life, and zero authority over it. Under a healthy mother's care, she is nurtured to maturity and given instruction on self-care as it pertains to her monthly cycle. What happens to a 10-year-old girl under a patriarchal paradigm? History clearly documents nothing good. Even in this country, the United States of America, child marriage is legal in some states. To be clear, there are grown men in America who would marry a child today. It had to be outlawed, but sadly only in some states! The message is clear, if not illegal, some men marry little girls; it begs the question… how do they not know better?

It's the patriarchy, man.

WTF

The exaltation of the archetype of 'Mother' by the patriarchy is an emotionally manipulative construct encouraging competitive mothering and keeping up with the Kardashians. Its holiday is observed on the second Sunday in May with a card and flowers. Mothering carries a job description that grows exponentially with time, the number of children, and the lack of participation of a spouse, usually Daddy.

Plus, have you heard the lore that Vietnamese women give birth to their babies while working in the rice paddy, up to their knees in mud with a ripped vagina, baby in tow? No problem because Motherhood makes you Superwoman! Look at you go ... self-sacrificing till the cows come home.

It's probably easier to be a single Mom if you never depended on him in the first place! But here's the thing: You can create more than a baby. The baby is a given; if you so choose, you don't need a Daddy, you just need a sperm. Assuming everything is working okay, with or without an active 'Daddy,' you could create a baby. Motherhood is a path many women desire all their lives and take readily, and it is an excellent choice if made of one's own volition (a problematic call in this world of saturated misogyny), but this is not a singular choice that limits you to many additional possibilities.

Pregnancy and childbirth often foster creativity in many women, and new ideas are born along with the infants.

Opting out of motherhood is a viable option and is increasingly considered by a growing number of women. Or if you are unable to conceive and pursue fertility, surrogacy, or adoption, don't feel diminished as a creative woman with energy, intelligence, love, and enthusiasm to offer! You are more than your uterus. Any person or government that would reduce a woman's worth to her child-bearing hips, yielding little soldiers, is part of the problem. The patriarchy is the problem.

Reject the dictates of the masculine culture and remember, the Love of Your Life is You, of course. And as the Love of Your Life, you seek happiness for yourself in every decision. You open doors for yourself, draw bubble baths, give gifts and pleasures, love, and touch yourself as needed. If, after all this wonderfulness that you've tapped into and found sustenance in, you want the company of a Lover man in your life - well, that is understandable. They are entertaining, after all.

But they are nothing more than icing.

You. Are. The. Cake.

Never forget that. And you take the cake. Beyond that, a good lover is a person who is selfless in the bedroom and generously makes your body 'a wonderland,' as John Mayer sings. Listen to that song - that sensuous attitude he is bringing to his lover is what you're looking for. You are the cake, and your body is a wonderland to a good lover.

Your body, your temple, where you live, move, and have your Being. A lover will respect your body to the degree that you do. Respect Yourself. Your Body. Resist the urge to pleasure him out of a sense of obligation - so passé (eye roll) going back to the lie that it's your job to take care of him sexually .... WRONG! Giving him access is a gift, never an obligation.

He has testosterone. You have the Portal of Life. Do the math. And the chemistry. A good lover brings it to you, offers it for you to receive. This is the energy of the Divine Feminine - receptive, inviting, sensual, not aggressive.

This isn't man-hating! You don't have to hate men to hate the patriarchy, or to be a feminist. Man-hating is not the point of feminism, and feminists don't hate men as a rule. This is a myth used to cast a shadow on the simple assertion that women's equality to men is self-evident. Men who don't support your autonomy don't deserve the time of day, much less the goodness of your vagina. Maybe screwing a conservative could be enjoyable, but he is undeserving if he believes you're not in charge of your own body. Consider holding out for a man who is capable of mutual respect and adoration of your amazing feminine aura, complete with portal access. It's delicious to guard your portal for more deserving men who recognize your complete and total equality, misogyny in check.

Finding a man like this is golden; you can make him your lover. Feel free to grow and learn in the relationship with your Lover. He can touch all the points a husband can touch without the ownership vibe that matrimony brings: a culturally disproportionate power structure that has poisoned the usefulness of marriage today.

Having children and raising them to be excellent human beings does not require servitude to a patriarchal cause. Even if you don't know what to replace it with, using Love as the guide will keep you unfolding your autonomous self as a woman, lover, or mother.

Also, you don't have to do shit.

Chapter 5 Playlist

Formation (Beyoncé)

Small Town Scandal (Zolita)

Sweetest Pie (Megan Thee Stallion, Dua Lipa)

YaYa (Beyoncé)

~~Super Freaky Girl (Nicki Minaj)~~

When Will I Be Mine? (Hailey Orion)

Women Don't Owe You Shit (ASTON)

Chapter 5 Self-Care Suggestions

Music - OMG, music: It is a great healer. To get started, you can embark on an incredible healing passage directed by Beyoncé, Dua Lipa, Doja Cat, Lizzo, Cardi B, and Megan Thee Stallion. The contribution of Black women to the liberation of all women is unfathomable. Contemplate that.

Thank you, Black Women everywhere.

Need a hit to your self-esteem? Need comfort because of a dumb man? Need to appreciate your vagina? Need to feel connected to a world of humans who understand? Need to rise up? Need to heal? Need to find self-love? Search Spotify for any one of those needs, and a playlist will emerge. Enjoy!

Movement: Your body wants it; give it what it wants. If you don't like the gym, screw it. You can be fit and healthy and have a happy body by giving it the kind of movement it prefers.

Walking, dancing, swimming, vacuuming, dusting, using your vibrator, calisthenics, yoga, chair yoga, and watching numerous YouTube videos with various exercise types, dance styles, and levels of difficulty, from beginner to expert; there are almost infinite ways to move your body.

Pick a few and get started.

Hair: Have you ever heard the phrase, 'Change your hair, change your life?' Undoubtedly, a hair designer coined the saying, but it is true! Have you ever noticed how some women have the same hair throughout their lives? Is that you? Have you believed that you don't look good with short hair? Or you're too old for longer hair? What kind of hair do you want? Have you ever experimented with your hair?

If your hair is an accessory or an expression of your personality, what is it communicating about you? Spend some money getting a professional's input on the cut/color/do you want.

STEP 6:

Meet Your Vagina,
Rewrite Herstory

What is your relationship with your vagina? Are you friends? Do you regularly check up on her well-being? Is she happy? Are you two at peace? Is she a stranger, like some remote 'other' who's demanding and messy once a month? Do you harbor ill feelings? What emotions do you feel as you read these words? Shame? Embarrassment? Grossed out?

Consider it for a moment.

Your vagina, in case you haven't considered it, is a sacred portal between nothingness and existence. Your vagina, along with her sidekick, the uterus, et al., is nothing less than a life-giving creator of the human form.

She prepares a place for the human spirit to house itself. Of course, the whole woman accomplishes this with ease (if all goes well), but the passage into this world is ALWAYS through the portal between a woman's legs - her vagina. And never with ease.

Granted, he planted his seed, making the first pass at the origin of life, sperm to egg. His contribution is but a drop in the bucket of baby-making. Once that contact has been made and everything is okay, your lady parts take over, build an entire human inside your womb, supplying this form all the resources it needs, right from you, directly from your blood. A new human being is created from your resources; she takes all she needs off the top of your everything; mother's and baby's bloodstreams are shared, coded DNA, circulating and creating the physical form, and in 9 months, a miracle is born.

No wonder primitive man feared women, resorting to bonking her on the head as foreplay. No wonder he needed to figure a way to keep her under control, for she possessed a robust skill set ... he must dominate her, harness, corral, and lock that shit down. He must devise a system of containment, assign values and roles, sprinkle in essences of god, and, most importantly, issue a threat of eternal suffering with non-compliance and wrap it in a fancy ceremony: She exchanges her name and freedom for a diamond ring.

It's time to level up the patriarchal attitude and dispel the lie perpetuating the superiority of masculine contribution. It's time to recognize the powerful value of the feminine.

If you have a vagina, you are The Shit! You are a Creator! You make creative contributions daily. Your presence is a creative vibe of contribution. You light up every room you walk into with elegance and grace. You bring a room the vibe, the magic, and the music. Never forget it - as a woman, you are amazing.

If you doubt your value (because of what Daddy made you believe), take some time to reframe your self-talk and upgrade your cognitive schema regarding the inhibition of the Divine Feminine energy. You and your Lady Garden possess amazing gifts.

Read poetry written by women about their vaginas, listen to female comedians, and female pop artists' music, especially Black Girl music - see the recommended playlist - and nurture your femininity for YOU, not anyone else.

If these words or this playlist makes you uncomfortable, consider that this is especially for you.

Take ownership: your body and sexuality, your vagina with her pleasures and pain. You have a longer-standing relationship with your vagina than any man who might come for a visit; he will not respect your vagina more than you do.

Please don't hand her to him to possess or 'protect' (eye roll)! EEEK! He can play with her, but she is yours to care for and protect. Allowing passage to this portal is entirely your decision and your consent to provide.

The absence of no is not yes.

Uncertainty is no.

A Good Vibrator

You need. You can ensure that you come every single time - no fumbling around looking for the clitoris, no slobbering on you, no getting it all wrong, no manhandling your lady parts.

Just you, loving on you, with some help from your battery-operated friend. You can pick out the 'friend' of your choice, size, shape, color, and accouterments. Subtle online shopping for the shy girls and specialty stores for brazen wenches and unafraid females to shop in person, seeing and sometimes feeling the phallus, you are drawn to; you can pick the dick of your choice!

Or two. Have your chosen fantasy; read erotica - it's not rocket science.

Now you might have some old guard shit surfacing that says this is not lady-like, not cool for a girl to masturbate or pleasure herself outside the purview of her husband ... this is pure patriarchal possession of your vagina, your portal. Please free yourself and your pussy.

Your vagina belongs to nobody. She is yours to do with what you will. Play with and protect her from any man who would lay claim, even if you marry and even if you have babies.

If you choose to have babies, when you do, you will begin making sacrifices from the start. Naturally and with ease, mothers put their children first. And for years, if you're a mommy, you will easily sacrifice for your child. But not her Daddy! Make significant life choices for yourself, pursuing your bliss and keeping your happiness in mind. Resist checking boxes the patriarchy has dictated to you, as if you're not married in your twenties and having babies soon after that, you'll become old, over the hill, and undesirable to men.

Conversely, in your twenties, it's likely you're just beginning to discover your voice, to know yourself and your interests, your posse, career, and way of making money. You're just getting started, a 'baby adult', gaining momentum in your twenties, so what, exactly, is the damn hurry? Women are waiting later to have babies, a statistic the patriarchy is not in favor of ... signaling the removal of reproductive freedom.

Still, men control important decisions for women. What arrogance and audacity of men, based on their self-appointed authority. Do you feel insulted? Angry? Rageful? Betrayed? Will you settle for equality? Or will you seek revenge? When the tables turn, how will you treat him? What will you do when the power 'ball' is in your court?

All you need to do to get there is to protect your portal. Therein lies your power. Sexual energy is creative energy. What are you creating with it? Some fine dinners? Fashionable outfits? Paintings? Drawings? Writing in your journal? Nurturing yourself in whatever way feels good and brings you bliss?

Raising your vibes to happy ones and sleeping well. Listening to music, hanging out with friends, or not. Hanging out with yourself is an endless opportunity to do what you want when you want for as long as you want. Dancing, singing, jumping, or moving in your chair to music is profoundly healing, claiming or reclaiming your body, reframing value and beauty to replace objectification and misogyny, and replacing respect and love for your body and yourself.

You are liberating yourself from any Daddy's dominance and any ownership of you, or the lie that you can't trust yourself to make logical choices or determine what's best for you. Even if you feel clueless about who you are or what you want, ultimately, it might not be true that your 'dream job' is to be a wife, have babies, and make a man happy by running the household and raising his children.

The patriarchy elevated the idea of 'motherhood 'with labels like Mom of the Year, as a manipulation, perhaps to throw a bone for her tireless efforts to make his life run so smoothly. Daddy's patriarchy faux celebrates the maternal skills of the over-functioning mom being all things to all family members, no matter her health, time, energy, or availability. These are sacrifices women have made for centuries. And at Christmas, you get a robe.

If you can be a Lesbian, be one.

Self-Care Is Sexy!

SELF-CARE! Equipped with your newfound or rarified relationship with your vagina and the vibrator of your choice, orgasms are a given anytime you choose. No more hoping and praying the idiot finds your clitoris. Your orgasm is only the tip of the iceberg in the ocean of self-care choices you can make. Acting as the Love of Your Life, you can do everything you have wanted and waited for Mr. Right to do for you, to you, or on your behalf.

What have you longed for?

Ponder this seriously and on an ongoing basis. It changes as you grow and mature in your life and on your path. Change is the one constant in life. Getting clear on your wants, needs, and desires is crucial in creating happiness for yourself. Spend time contemplating these questions:

What do I want?

What is my dream for this life? What will I create?

What kind of future do I want for myself (in addition to babies, probably a given if you want it)?

What do I envision for next year? The next 5 years?

Answering these questions is the process of discovering your individual self-care needs, which are way more than physical! It's bigger than an orgasm or even multiple orgasms. Taking on your sexual needs on your own is liberating and a time saver.

Instead of playing Capture the Man, you can build your empire. A happy woman is a powerful woman. You are the Love of Your Life.

Explore that thought. How does it change the way you treat yourself? Have you ever taken yourself to dinner and a movie? Would you go to a concert or a live music venue on your own? Or maybe you'd prefer a quiet night at home with a good book and your sweet pet snuggled up next to you? DoorDash? Dancing alone in your living room? Naked?

Who's on Your Team?

As a woman, is your brain a friend or foe? Contrary to popular belief, it's not your vagina that attracts; it's your brain that is constantly attracting and creating. Is she on your team or a clever saboteur? She needs as much consideration as your vagina on this path of liberation!

Consider this visual:

Around a conference table in the boardroom of your mind, sit various characters from your life. Your mother and father, maybe your sibling(s), as well as any teacher or person - good or bad -who has influenced you with their words or deeds. A math teacher? A coach? A theatre director? A preacher? An abuser?

Your thoughts are represented by the voices or opinions of these 'influencers,' called your 'self-talk.' This committee weighs in on every idea you have. All these inner whispers are not you -they represent the opinions or remarks of these past contributors to your sense of self and your esteem.

The trick is finding your voice among these loud experiences 'downloaded' from the past by your inner child. Every criticism, harsh word, and judgment, any bullying, name-calling, or ridicule is downloaded into your child-brain. This becomes the self-talk that runs incessantly, subtly like a program running in the background of all the other brain activity.

Deciphering your voice from all the mental clutter accumulated from a lifetime of downloads is the work of liberation from patriarchal trappings. Your authentic inner voice is not critical or fearful.

If a mean, abusive, critical inner voice is dominant and you have trouble finding or creating a kinder cognitive schema, find a good therapist. Human adults operate from the belief systems created by children - yours by you, toddling around, absorbing everything in your perceivable environment. If raised in an abusive environment, you likely have an abusive inner parent who regularly wreaks havoc on your tender inner self.

Sometimes, a guide is needed to reparent a wounded inner child, so that a kinder, gentler inner voice can emerge amidst the rubble of the old self. Liberation from generational trauma and irrational beliefs is as rewarding as it is difficult.

Discovering joy in reparenting yourself is intoxicating - when you give your inner little girl what she needs, what she's been craving, love and acceptance - the world opens. You can lead her out of the box she was shoved into and encourage her voice, maybe for the first time.

You may feel a myriad of strong emotions during this deep work, all justified; feelings are never 'wrong', and you are never wrong to 'feel' them. Emotions are not rational and should not be treated as such! You don't 'reason' with emotions ... you feel them.

The patriarchal paradigm seems to be stumped by passionate emotion, sending a cultural message: Don't feel, don't acknowledge feelings, and never allow feelings to affect decision-making. Maybe you heard messages about being 'too sensitive' and that you need to 'toughen up', and it's true that at some point in your life, Big Girl Panties becomes a necessity, but not when you are a child looking for help in identifying, understanding, and valuing your feelings.

Telling an empathic person to stop being sensitive encourages them to reject a core quality of their personhood. Teaching that sensitivity is a deficit, something to be overcome, is a disservice to women everywhere. Women don't need to be more like men to be successful humans. (In fact, the opposite is true - men need to be more like women - that is, sensitive and empathic.)

Women are generally built with an empathic ability to connect with other humans, as they were part of the original design. Women have been building and birthing babies, nursing and raising them many times (most times?), sacrificing careers as they watch their bellies grow and become the incubator for an in-development human being. Women birth the babies, enduring unimaginable pain as their once nubile vagina stretches to allow passage of a small watermelon.

'Nuff Said

For lucky babies, a healthy 'good enough' mother is the primary caregiver; if breastfeeding, the mother is the ultimate provider of safety and sustenance. This intimate proximity to a baby's holistic development has impregnated the collective unconscious of women with a deeper connection and perhaps a greater understanding of human nature. Or perhaps it's a natural part of embodying the energy of the Divine Feminine.

Hopefully, you've learned that being 'too sensitive' is another lie. The notion of needing to 'toughen up' is misguided advice. Instead, embrace the magical power of your female intuition, heartfelt wisdom, and the sense of 'knowing' that witches have enjoyed for centuries. That power essence that you are when you are in tune with your heart is mountain-moving energy, manifesting magic when you know what you want and can feel it. It's all yours in due time. The difficulty arises with the committee's self-doubt and inner double talk as they argue the validity of the desire. If you have identified your voice amongst them, you can navigate through the naysaying fears and insecurities.

If you struggle to find your voice at the table, please see a qualified professional who can help you with this task. Once you find your voice, it's all over for the ones who would control you.

You become a calm force of Mother Nature. Finding your voice is exhilarating. No matter how repressed you have felt in the past, you can change that today. Making incremental changes in your thinking and behavior will elevate your experiences.

Decentering men and instead focusing on self-care will open many doors. When you are self-caring, you are nurturing the fabric of your universe. What you nurture grows because you're the creator of your reality. Respecting your creative potential in all aspects of your life, starting with who gains entrance to your portal, becomes second nature when you break out of the patriarchal paradigm!

Valuing Self-care over sex will confound men in your life! And those that wish they were!

Chapter 6 Playlist

Pure Honey (Beyoncé)

I Got the Juice (Janelle Monáe, feat. Pharrell Williams)

Juicy (Doja Cat)

Freak (Doja Cat)

THIQUE (Beyoncé)

Chapter 6 Self-Care Suggestions

Creativity:

Journal your feelings, write poetry (even if you think it's terrible), draw, paint, sew, craft, make a vision board, a dream journal, knit, crochet, dance, or move your body in primal ways: squat, jump, take up space.

Meditate and expand your consciousness to the edges of the universe as far as you can imagine.

Visualize your chakras. Search how artists depict them in images; find chakra meditations on YouTube.

Work with sound vibrations, tones, chants, or mantras - see what resonates for you.

Art is a beautiful way to fill your emotional bucket. Read poetry and find the genre that moves you and resonates with your current POV. Let music, the rhythm, lyrics, and harmonious sounds bathe you in love and resonance. Dance or move to the sound.

Practice twerking. No one is judging you (except you, perhaps?).

Have you ever experienced a Sound Bath? Google and see if you can experience it in your area.

Did you love to draw or paint as a kid? Are you a repressed sculptor? A potter? In learning how to practice better Self-Care, you may rediscover a prior hobby or source of play that you had given up for no good reason.

These creative activities bring joy and meaningfulness to you as a soulful individual. Dancing, singing, and general playful frivolity are unfortunately missing in the serious business of maturity in the world of the patriarchy. But with the emergence of Mother Nature's Divine Feminine spirit, women are dancing and playfulness returns as part of your nature.

Creativity is healing. What have you given up along the way of self-sacrifice? What can you recapture? Want to take West Coast Swing Dance lessons? A pottery class? Drag out the easel and dust off those watercolors! Look on YouTube for free art lessons or dance moves! Resources are everywhere and essentially free! (Luckily, you need no one's permission!

STEP 7:

Your Internalized Misogyny

You got it, so don't think you don't! Right there, next to your insecurity, fear, and feelings of inferiority. Growing up female in America means you have been indoctrinated into a standard of beauty, behavior, and designated roles, usually subordinate.

As a woman living in the United States of America, your human rights are up for debate state by state, and you are living in a time of devaluation as a precursor to the massive takeover by the Divine Feminine. Yes, today, as of this writing, women in America are not free.

Once you become pregnant, you are a ward of some states, required to carry to term and birth a baby regardless of your circumstances. This bigotry and misogynistic control of women need to be eradicated and will be as Mother Nature takes matters into her hands. A new narrative is emerging as the old crashes and burns. And because you grew up in a misogynistic culture, you likely have internalized judgment and criticism against yourself and your sisters.

And because you weren't taught to be direct, to ask, or to say what you need, you may have learned to manipulate and use a more covert narrative to achieve your goal. And, of course, the skill of 'making it his idea' is rewarded with his climb in the ranks of his career. This is a mad skill set that showcases a woman's brilliance and leadership qualities, ultimately only benefiting her male counterpart. What might she accomplish if she were direct?

And women excel at good placating and bartering - tit for tat - LOL. Don't threaten the man by being too ambitious or resourceful.

be cool and play by the rules set by a hierarchy you are not privy to,

but if you play your cards right, maybe you can be a water-bearer.

The water-bearers are the saddest human women. They have yet to discover their voice beyond the one assigned at birth. Born and raised in a patriarchal family structure in a world with small parameters within which she can exist, Daddy's girl absorbs all the messages of limitations.

Some women never pierce the veil covering their true Self and instead believe Daddy's message of needing him to survive a scary world. Her psyche becomes linked to finding a man who can care for her like Daddy did, and her female friends become a source of competition.

Women bully differently than men. It's called 'relational aggression.' Girls bully by ruining another girl's social standing in the group through non-physical means: spreading rumors or lies, gossiping, excluding someone from the group, name-calling, cyberbullying, making fun of a girl's appearance, and behaviors that most middle school girls live through in some capacity.

Thinking back, what was your experience as a pre-teen and teenager? Did you play both roles of bully and victim?

Who do you think the Mean Girls are?

If you have gossiped, intentionally excluded a girl, listened to gossip about a friend, or turned one friend against another, you have participated in bullying. This behavior is prevalent in girl culture. While little girls play with Barbies together, as they enter puberty, they often see each other as competition for boys' attention.

Another way of describing this is internalized misogyny.

Jealousy, envy, and competition replace cooperative play. Do you or did you want your Bestie's boyfriend? Does she want yours? Have you traded your friendship for the game of Capture the Boy? How many female friendships have been tainted by competition for the attention of men?

Prioritizing the pursuit of a husband is misappropriated and undoubtedly a goal imprinted on young girls by a culture manipulated by the masculine paradigm.

Waking to comprehend the pervasive history of misogyny, to feel it, grieve it, and call it out robustly and repeatedly, starting with your thoughts and words in relationships with men and women, is an excruciating realization.

If you find profound rage and sadness when you look inside, see a therapist who is a feminist. And don't be afraid of the word. The patriarchal weaponization of the words 'feminist' and 'feminism ' is indicative of the contempt some men have for women's right to equality. They have a lot to lose, apparently.

Don't take the bait.

Be a feminist; claim it, expect it from family and friends, and require it of any man seeking passage to the portal.

Be Selective

Don't open your portal to any man who does not support your complete and total freedom right now. This is the power of the portal. If women would only allow passage to men who view them as equals, this shit would get straightened out in a nanosecond.

The portal is a Superpower. Your Superpower. You are under no obligation to share it with anyone. As the Love of Your Life, you are taking care of yourself. There is no rush to find a suitable man. You have vital shit to tend to, and being a man's possession is not one of them. Asserting your independence from Daddy, leaving home and his overreach, educating yourself, becoming a Boss with a bank account, and having the freedom to pursue your Bliss most certainly is.

Identifying your internalized misogyny is imperative in developing self-love.

It takes courage to look within and corner the 'mean girl' seated at the head of the table of your 'inner committee.' You need to cut that bitch's mic!

She's the critic who runs an ongoing commentary as to how you look, act, and dress; how much you weigh, your hair and skin, nails and makeup, your fashion sense or lack thereof, the shitty friends you have, and the loser path you're on right now; how you've never amounted to much and on and on and on.

The negative self-talk is often disguised misogyny you have downloaded into your computer brain; the program runs incessantly. She probably runs the same commentary about your friends and people you might otherwise admire. Uncovering the origin of the critical voice, typically a parent or person of authority, is a primary goal of therapy. But it's not imperative to unravel it to fix it. Remember the 'feel it and let it go' exercise? This works beautifully to release the ties that bind you to the dysfunction from whence you came.

Enough with the self-judgment - it has zero positive contribution to your well-being.

Do some research. Listen to YouTube videos of Taylor Swift commenting on misogyny in the music industry and our culture and her writing of 'The Man.' (If you don't like TS, all the better to do the research!)

Think about the women in your life that you loathe and why? Have they insulted you directly? Or do you not like them for another reason, such as her looks? Her boyfriend? Is that fair? Is there self-loathing reflected in your criticism of her?

The impact of the lie of male superiority, deeply ingrained into the psyche of human society, is pervasive. Females are beholden to men in the workplace, at home, in politics, and in the world at large. The Barbie movie so beautifully teased the patriarchy in a sweet, creative, and sexy way; misogyny is sung and danced about in this celebratory satire!

Women have played the game of male superiority since the beginning, despite the difficulty of hiding their brilliance in the presence of a gray patriarchy, lest they be persecuted. Truly, you cannot help but bring the glitter, glow, and genius to the environment. Why do you think they so desperately try to contain you in marriage, shackle you for breeding, take away your voice and your name, and give you a memo of your job description? They would own your uterus and reproductive freedom, like livestock. The historical significance of marriage remains alive and well in the paradigms and fairy tales you likely grew up hearing.

Does this message anger you?

As always, feel free to fall in love, marry, and have babies. Keep your financial independence as best you can. Do not believe your husband knows what's best for you because he doesn't know you like you know yourself.

You are the Love of Your Life.

Even when pregnant and birthing babies, raising children, and making sacrifices for them, despite all the life choices you can make, you are still the Love of Your Life, so please treat yourself accordingly.

If the man in your life needs to learn how to treat a queen, you must rise to the occasion to teach him. Your daughters need to see their mother actively loved and respected. Your son needs to see his father treat the woman in his life with utmost tenderness and adoration.

The masculine needs to address the damage done to the feminine for centuries: the lies perpetuated from generation to generation, the religions and countries built on the superiority of men, and the oppression of women. Rectify. Sanctify.

Girded with the concept of hell and a handbag, the patriarchy captured feminine power for the win. Subduing powerful creative energy must be tough. Drawing from the vast fear of the female sexual capabilities of procreation, he had to devise a comprehensive system of beliefs wherein he maintained dominion over her and her sexuality.

Still true today, men hold dominion over women's bodies and their choices regarding their future. But this is ending. The patriarchal worldview, its manipulation of politics, and gaslighting superiority upon generations, is falling apart as women wake up and shake off the denial. Women are remembering who they are. Like you, waking up, taking the wheel in your life; then, as women do, sharing the power and watching it grow like concentric waves in a river of creative energy and influence. And just like before, the dinosaurs are the last to see the meteor heading in, beginning the end of the old-guard's hold. The patriarchal dominion over humanity's global influence is crumbling.

Momma's Home

First up, clean house. You have tolerated the intolerable for centuries, Babe. You can now decide on the treatment you require for your guest list. No explanations are needed. As the Love of Your Life, CHOOSE who drinks from your cup.

Take no prisoners. Set a standard of maintaining the freedom to be yourself and to make all decisions that pertain to your best interest. Break the standard, risk banishment.

Be vigilant to misogyny, especially your own. When you identify it, feel and hear it, sister, call it out. Love yourself back to homeostasis by letting it go and remembering who you are.

If it's Daddy or hubby or brother or brutha - call that shit out! Men will never get it (even well-meaning 'white' men who say they do, don't get it ... how could they?).

Second, women must give up placating men in exchange for a few freedoms. If you want a night out with friends, you don't have to give him a blow job to assert that privilege. You can go out with a friend and have a cocktail. You don't need his permission. You don't have to explain yourself.

Discard the placation game. It's tedious, and he learns nothing. Instead of wasting your incredible intelligence appeasing him and propping up his male ego, why not be real with him instead? Show him your authentic self: sexy, clever, creative, and unapologetic. State your need, desire, or intention and let the chips fall where they may.

If a cocktail with your Bestie is a special favor you must earn from your husband, are you free?

Are you free? Also, guess what ... women are tired of playing that placation game. Instead of hiding your incredible power as a woman, and instead of making it more palpable for men by being sexy and clever, making it 'his' idea, notice that you are OUT of that box.

You have never needed his permission. Remember? You left the house; you declared your independence from Daddy. And it was a fairy tale that suggested you needed a man to protect your freedom - in fact, it's the man from whom you need protection. Please remember who you are and your unique ability to identify and care for your needs.

You are your protector, the Love of Your Life, and you can be that and more by being true to yourself. Focusing your energy on furthering your cause, whatever it is (besides finding a man), can only bring more of everything you need to succeed in your liberation and your pursuit of happiness for YOU.

You can have all the men you want. But you don't need him for your survival.

You got you!

Chapter 7 Playlist

Best Friend (Saweetie, Doja Cat)

Her (Megan Thee Stallion)

All My Girls Like to Fight (Hope Tala)

Flawless (Beyoncé)

little miss misogyny (audalei)

brutal (Olivia Rodrigo)

Pinot Grigio Girls (Lady Gaga)

Chapter 7 Self-Care Suggestions

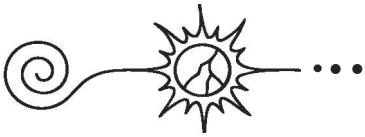
Take your Bestie on a date. Maybe see some musical theatre. Or live music at a concert or a bar. Dance together like you did when you were little girls! Braid each other's hair.

Seek out groups of women who are like-minded in the pursuit of happiness through liberation from patriarchal entrapment. Become an activist. Get involved in the fight for women's autonomy and equality. Bring your girls with you, expand your influence, and be intentional.

Attend speeches and listen to podcasts about female empowerment.

Connect with or confront your mother about her autonomy. Learn who she is besides your mother - she is a woman with a life that changed dramatically when you came along. What did she want to be when she grew up? Did she achieve that goal?

Listen and learn.



STEP 8:

Righteous Fucking Indignation

It's okay to feel anger, rage, and deep feelings of betrayal. Facing denial (Daddy would never mistreat me) and embracing rage (fuck that man!) is excruciatingly painful. If Daddy were outwardly mean to you, it might be easier for you to walk out. If his insidious control went unnoticed until now, you may not have identified the rage and hurt hidden beneath your Good Girl mask.

Do you suffer from migraine headaches, irritable bowel, colitis, gastritis, or other chronic gut or pain conditions? Could it be repressed rage and sadness that your psyche tucked away for your survival? Your gut is the seat of emotions and your 'second brain.' It's not equipped to handle strong emotions that you are stuffing and ignoring, even if you're doing it unconsciously. Regulating strong emotions through a conscious understanding of the triggers will also address the physiological symptoms. Win/win.

Because Daddy truly believed he knew better for you than you knew for yourself, his arrogant control of you is forgivable. He thought he was acting in your best interest by controlling you.

This was true for a few years in your girlhood. But how did Daddy treat you when you began expressing your voice loudly and clearly? Did he applaud and encourage you? Did he express approval of your awesomeness? Or did he start to tamp it down a little? Did you hear from Daddy, 'You're too loud, too sensitive, you're fat, and you need to change clothes,' or 'You need to change your attitude,' and terms like 'young lady' at the end of a sentence of consternation?

Can you recall or imagine a time before those messages affected your self-esteem? Do you have any photographic captures of her in her bliss? Dancing? Or spinning?

Remember the little girl you were? Remember her fearless enthusiasm, her openness to love, and her authenticity? It's not your fault she may have gotten off track, sidetracked, or blindsided by your family of origin - your Daddy. He, also a victim of the patriarchy, is working through this shit, too.

The patriarchal rule disseminated that tired message of control since the beginning, a lie that's fallen short for centuries and has driven the health of Earth into a state of crisis. Masculinity without its feminine balance is destructive.

That was then, and this is now, and when you know better, you do better, right? You are here, setting the record straight for yourself and your family tree, fixing misogyny in your progeny - a tall order with little precedence. Addressing generational trauma takes courage and can be a lonely undertaking. Family systems often resist change, even when it brings healing.

So, how does one heal misogyny? Can you feel it?

(SILENT SCREAM)

Who the fuck is to blame

For this misguided bullshit

The world is on fire.

It's time to stop and ask for directions.

By the time you reach middle age, you have or will have experienced 'bad male behavior' in one form or many others. The 'boys will be boys' defense has exceeded its statute of limitations.

Women's tolerance of bad male behavior is WHY the world burns! Stop and scream if you need to when you tap into the universal rage and pain of generations of women in your family who were burned at the stake of toxic masculinity.

Every woman who has ever existed has done so in a man's world, one created in his image to support his vision of the future of MANkind. A woman is the unsuspecting sidekick to his misogynistic control.

You were recruited from the cradle to support patriarchal superiority with cute inferiority and sexy compliance. Rah, rah, rah! Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders underpaid hotties doing Daddy's bidding: Be sexy, shake your ass for our crowd, but don't expect to be valued as reflected in your paycheck.

And please adhere to beauty standards set by a misogynistic man in some basement in Ohio!

Oh man,

The deep gash: a wounded heart open

Bleeding: How can you hate me? How?

Blood from my heart,

Calcium from my bones

Milk from my breast

How can you hate me?

Man, what happened to you?

Why choose hate over love?

Control over cooperation

Dominance over equality

Mistakes have been made

Look beyond EGO

Arms are for embracing

Being willing to feel rage is epic and a gift to generational and cultural healing - yours and that of generations of women before you, some in your lineage, and millions more in the current state of women worldwide today.

The vibe is shifting. The future is female. The future is here. Now.

And so are You.

Family of Woman Tree

Feeling the rage inspires many responses. Some destructive because obviously ... this shit sucks, and sometimes you just have to say FUCK OFF in a colossal way, blow something up metaphorically, flip the table at Thanksgiving, and declare your independence from it all.

To be Boss, create yourself out of this rage ... make something: music, art, reparent yourself, start therapy, journal, skydive, learn a language - there are unlimited ways to explore your emotional growth and recovery, not to mention the love this brings to generations of women as well as your descendants.

Remember, it's generational growth and healing to live intentionally for your descendants rather than to please your ancestors.

Are You a Feminist?

Duh, right? Do you date only feminists? Hopefully, you only offer your portal to feminists. Unfortunately, some people are reluctant to identify as 'feminist' because terrible men like the late Rush Limbaugh, exhibiting bad male behavior, hijacked the word 'feminist.' He slimed the word with an ugly moniker like 'feminazi' and such, invalidating the assertion that women are independent and need no intervention in their personhood. A feminist believes that women deserve equal rights in every aspect of life without question or debate. Who doesn't agree with that?

So, of course, you are a feminist. How can feminists reclaim the word and reinforce the value of feminism for the whole of humanity? The time has come!

Na-Na-Na-Na-Na-Na

How about women take control of the only currency the patriarchy tends to value in women: their pussy, of course.

No equal rights? No pussy. No man will die being refused sex. No shots fired. Just a sexual boycott until the culture finally balances itself via equality across cultures, genders, sexes, countries, and all inhabitants of this Earth.

What kind of person opposes equality for everyone?

Of course, Daddy might lose his woman-servants (the ones who DO EVERYTHING for him) but not the 'water-bearers - the brainwashed handmaidens of the patriarchy doing the bidding of Daddy in all his variations: boyfriend, husband, preacher, brother, uncle, neighbor, coach, history teacher, and even gynecologist! Sad that these 'sisters' have yet to discover their voice and their need for freedom and independence; instead, relying on men for validation, direction and, most laughably, protection! Water-bearers settle for the crumbs of Daddy's success, why is that enough? Is it satisfying? Are you happy being his wife, assistant, organizer, stabilizer, mistress, and the regulator of his emotions?

Are you happy? How happy are you? Are you free? Are you who you want to be?

Addressing Fear

Love and fear are not compatible. If you are living in fear, acknowledge to yourself that this is not love. Suppressing fear, ignoring it, drinking it away, or any other means of denial does not tend to this crippling emotion. Not only is fear the absence of love, but it's also a debilitating anxiety that can feel like a freight train crashing through all the safety barriers with flashing lights, bells, and whistles sounding. It can be incapacitating.

Buddhism has a nice teaching called The Five Remembrances, intended to reduce fear by embracing the scariest things humans ponder. Google it and read the lesson in the essay and practice to bring fear into a manageable human emotion. It's a practice to reduce fear in your psyche. Practicing The Five Remembrances chips away at the knot of fearful beliefs a little at a time. Facing these concepts instead of avoiding them is freeing!

Facing fear is an existential part of the human condition, and learning to live with and accept it with gratitude and awe is liberating.

Addressing Forgiveness

Taylor Swift said: 'You don't have to forgive, and you don't have to forget to move on ... you simply become indifferent.'

Good advice! It's liberating to move on and let go of hurtful relationships and the stories that surround them. The pressure to forgive people for the betrayals and mean-spirited situations can feel overwhelming, and sometimes it's better to just walk away and dust off your sandals.

If you have 'quit church' and are redirecting your spiritual energies and emotions to a healthier paradigm of self-love rather than punishment, you are pioneering your matriarchal path. You're a good person, yet you don't want to repeat old behaviors of compliance and placating under the guise of 'forgiving.' You don't have to make Daddy more comfortable or make his 'problem' disappear. He can handle his stuff.

When Taylor was transgressed, she used her pain and anger as fuel to drive her transformation and reemergence as a powerhouse creative artist and businesswoman. She conjured up a musical spell for the witches, Soulful alchemy for the maidens and goddesses, fun and playfulness for the young ones, a wink and a nod to Crones, and a healing balm for the brokenhearted, all offered in enormous venues of feminine energy. Magnificent!

Thank you, Taylor!

And thank you, Beyoncé, another woman who uses pain and heartache as a creative driving force. That beautiful Boss Bitch made the album 'Lemonade' from her painful experiences in a relationship, demonstrating a deeply spiritual process of transforming and transmuting anguish and rage into a creative gift to the world.

Embracing that album, especially if you are healing from betrayal, can guide you through a healing metamorphosis. Beyoncé brings a guttural outlet of pain and rage in 'Don't Hurt Yourself,' an excellent song to vent deep emotional pain and to remind yourself that you are no 'average bitch', no way, no how.

Black Girl music is transformative and deeply healing. Discover that, if you don't already know! Let the power and sassy strength of Black Girl Music give you confidence and pride in your body and your groove. Cardi B, Megan Thee Stallion, GloRilla, Rhiannon, Aretha Franklin! Tina Turner, and so many Black Women artists and female artists across the board, channeling the Divine Feminine with a backbeat. Before women can clean house, they've got to purge and toss out old notions without precedent. Look at her go! Thank you, Selena.

Got Forgiveness?

Wow, forgiveness - that patriarchal concept going back to the Garden of Eden.

Remember how Eve fucked everything up after so kindly offering Adam the fruit? She offered it up. He took the offer, and women are forever blamed for it! An original lie from which all patriarchal lies emanate.

Consider this reframe from a Divine Feminine perspective:

1) Woman came from Man instead of MAN CAME FROM WOMAN, and

2) After the initial mistake that Eve made and Adam blamed her for, she becomes empowered to focus on her own development instead of 'subjugation' or 'inferiority' or ‘penance’ or ‘baby-making obligation’ to Adam. She recognizes her power to create, chooses to care for the garden to make things grow, and tends to her work, and allows Adam to tend to his.

Mother Nature is forgiving. She allows do-overs. There’s always another chance, another season, and another growth cycle, another turn of the wheel. However, the patriarchy has reduced you, defined your worth and purpose, and dictated your choices and future. There’s no forgiving that. There’s just walking away.

To pursue your purpose and happiness as a free and independent entity is what you are owed as a human woman. Daddy can’t give you that; he can’t tell you that; at best, he can open the door for you and get out of your way.

Only you can discover your purpose, direction, and gifts. Why are you here? What do you want to accomplish? What brings you Bliss?

Acting as the Love of Your Life gently nurtures these values and brings these goals into focus. It’s not about forgiveness; it’s about creating. It’s about making lemonade.

The Work and the Fun

Oh sure, maybe you have a broken heart (sorry to minimize), but chances are something extraordinary is happening to you.

If you left Daddy for whatever reason, you think, the real reason is your independence and insistence on living life and making decisions on your terms. Follow your heart and path and rhythm and cycle ... not Daddy's or husband's.

Figuring out what that looks like takes time, and that's okay. Take as much time as you need! This is your life, and following your dreams is encouraged in the matriarchy - however much time it takes.

You are worth the investment. And it's nobody else's business.

Addressing Rage is necessary along the way, but finding it is an excellent first step. Because girls are made of 'sugar and spice and everything nice' (so you've heard) and anger is not 'ladylike' (hard eye roll), you are likely unaware or uncomfortable with your anger finding tears a more comfortable expression.

Women deny their anger many times instead opting for tears, which feel 'safer' and less intimidating to Daddy. Are you more comfortable crying than throwing expletives?

Anger is an important human emotion indicating that your boundaries have been crossed. Someone stepped on your peace and ruffled your feathers. It's never wrong to feel your feelings - anger is not bad. If Daddy chastises or teases you for feeling strongly, if he tells you you're wrong, that you shouldn't feel the way you feel, he is invalidating your experience at the least and gaslighting you in the worst-case situation.

You are NOT crazy to have feelings, even intense ones; they're likely your superpower!

Regulating strong emotions is top-tier maturity. And power. Allowing your feelings to inform you in all circumstances gives you an edge over any person (man) who might call you 'too sensitive.' If he tells you that you're over the top or too much for him, encourage him to go find less.

Embrace your feelings as the valuable skills they are. Don't ignore, repress, deny, or reject them because they convey volumes of information. Don't feel ashamed of being sensitive. Understanding your feelings, as well as those of other people, is a gift greatly lacking in today's culture.

Today's social media platforms capture human emotion through the use of emoticons. Conversations, flirting, arguing, and negotiating via apps like Snapchat, Blue Sky, Instagram, and Facebook leave miles open for misinterpretation, misunderstanding, and miscommunication. This circumvents any actual human connection where feeling your feelings is unavoidable. It happens. And auras commingle, and vibrations align.

Feelings

If you were taught that your emotions make you weak and vulnerable, you might need to rehabilitate your brain from the throes of pure patriarchal 'spin.' This lie is part of the 'weaker sex' argument that emanates from and perpetuates misogyny within the ranks of men and women alike.

The argument is over a standard set by the patriarchy that devalues feelings in the human experience; an attempt to shroud women's gift of empathy, making her question, once again, her worth. How did the patriarchy get to set the standard of success for being human? Especially human women. Promoting the idea that feelings and emotions suggest weakness is the root of many of the world's problems today.

So, when Daddy determined that feelings are bad, untrustworthy, superfluous, flowery, and over the top, needing to be squelched, a standard of stoicism was set for his daughters and sons. Attempting to separate a person from their ability to feel, to place a wedge between a child's heart and their gut, is a most evil form of manipulation. Targeting emotional intelligence as hocus pocus is another attempt to squelch the feminine gift of intuition. When feelings are devalued, they become a secondary skill set.

Teaching a girl that her emotions make her insane or irrational is equivalent to feeding her poison. Teaching a girl that she's too sensitive sets her up for years of self-doubt, negative self-talk, and arguing with a self she can't trust. Feelings are never wrong. They're the authentic expression of who you are and how you are in each moment.

Teaching girls (and boys) how to regulate their emotions and understand their feelings, how to set boundaries to protect themselves, and how to express them effectively (not suppress them) is top-tier matriarchal parenting.

What About you?

Do you judge yourself for being sensitive? Do you try to keep things under wraps?

Does your empathy for others cause you to over-function in relationships? Do you show the same empathy for yourself? Can you easily identify what you're feeling? Can you express it? Or have you been taught to ignore your feelings? If so, you could be missing your right arm!

Effective communication acknowledges and understands feelings. If you do that for yourself, you likely bring that same insight into connecting with other human beings. Remember, feelings are never wrong. They're feelings, and therefore not rational by their very nature! Feelings are respected in the Matriarchy, and Mother Nature understands that feelings need acknowledgment and respect. Feelings inform decision-making in a primal 'spidey' way.

Your gut is rarely wrong. Your gut is not located in your ability to rationalize, but in your ability to feel and understand what you're feeling. Call it female intuition. That 'knowing' you have when you trust your gut. Or you listen to your 'wise mind' or the 'grandmother within.' Or Spirit as you understand Her.

It's like magic. And for this, they burned your ancestors.

Are Ya Mad?

Have you heard the assertion: If you're not angry, you're not paying attention!?

If you're not angry, you haven't clued into some dramatic truths in America today and the world at large. The misogynistic subjugation of women and their torture in cultures worldwide is an astounding blemish on humanity's family tree. The patriarchal cruelty embedded in the history of MANkind knows no bounds in its arrogance and glaring lack of compassion. It's killing the world.

In America in 2025, women are fighting for their personhood and for control over their bodies, as well as the right to full autonomy. All persons deserve complete dominion over their personhood. No man needs (or deserves) dominion over a woman or another man.

There are men in America (and admittedly, omg, WOMEN!) who continue to uphold the belief that women should remain under patriarchal control, that they are not worthy of autonomy from Daddy. Conveniently, the religion Daddy created assigns and reinforces men's superiority and women's obligation to serve them happily as second in command.

Saddest Woman Alive

Even a religious woman who chooses to follow the patriarchal authority of subjugation would hopefully see clearly to extend the same 'freedom to choose' to other women. But for that pesky internalized female misogyny toward women, only religious women would be voluntarily restricted by their religion, but women who are free of religion would be free.

Freedom means freedom to choose all things personal to you. Your religion, who you love, and your portal choices are all choices you make. When you realize how much control you have surrendered to Daddy, you might feel some anger, even rage, and pain.

You will join a succession of women from eons back who came to realize the abuse in their lives, parallel to the historical abuses and oppression. Tapping into the depth and breadth of the damage created by the lie of masculine superiority and the suppression of great feminine minds is excruciating and infuriating. Then the patriarchy shames women for wanting independence, calling them names and reducing them to incubators and domestic laborers. Check your emotions as you read these words. Chances are, you could be feeling triggered. Are you angry at the patriarchy or at these words?

Your Great Great Great Great Great … Grandmama

The witches that burned are your ancestors. Men did that. Largely religious men! And oppression and abuse, even murder, are still happening, although, knock on wood, so far no burnings at the stake. Yet. But the hatred and the superiority and the authoritarian need for control are the same.

Some white men in America believe and are teaching their young, both their sons and their daughters, that women belong barefoot and pregnant until they are no longer childbearing age; then they are to be available to raise grandchildren.

If that doesn't light you up, maybe you are numb to it. Or brainwashed, having been drinking the patriarchal Kool-Aid straight from your baby bottle and every day since then.

The audacity of the masculine mindset is staggering. Especially as you establish your independence, you might run into plenty of obstacles that would make you believe that you do not indeed know what the fuck you are doing ... and that could be true! However, you are allowed to make decisions that might lead you to benefit from a different path or a slight adjustment to your trajectory, which is perfectly okay. You can decide and redecide, and it's nobody's business but yours and anyone you share it with - you get to decide that as well.

Finding a way to feel, regulate, release, and heal one's emotions is advisable for a happy and fulfilling life. However, beneath the anger is likely a vast reservoir of uncried tears.

The Pain and Rage Roller Coaster

The emotional ups and downs of feminism, the ebb and flow of fiery rage alternating with excruciating pain in the realization that the very people who 'love you' have also participated in the repression and the suppression of your authentic self.

They want control.

Which do you feel more - anger or despair? Pain is not a motivating emotion in the same way that anger is. What do you do when you're in pain? It's not likely that you 'rage against the machine,' ... but you might do that when you're angry, which could be fun, participating in a women's protest march!

Since knowledge is power, the work you do to identify these emotions and their corresponding thoughts/beliefs is time well spent. Your emotions may fluctuate from pain and sadness to rage and even feelings of destruction - a predictable, robust, and valid set of messages that need deciphering. Is there a negative belief attached to a negative emotion, like it's not nice to be angry? Feeling is healing, and identifying beliefs attached to the emotion will allow its transformation - remember the Monarch butterfly that was goo 10 days ago?

While you're undergoing this transformation from negative self-talk and beliefs to the beautiful butterfly you are becoming, why not utilize the cocoon time for social change? By taking the time you need inside your cocoon, by guarding your portal and not allowing willy-nilly access to Tom, Dick, or Harry of yesteryear, perhaps you can unify with your sisters to create a learning era for the patriarchy. Because men control the decisions that affect women and relegate them to second in command, maybe women could harness the power they wield over men, reminding them of the balance needed in these endeavors. With the emergence of the Divine Feminine, women can use the power of Mother Nature's gift to bring the patriarchy into balance.

Call it 'portal incentivization.' Encouraging men to open their hearts and minds to the universal mistreatment of women; to realize the destructive nature of their arrogance, and break through the denial of their selfish aggression. With the empathic connection that women bring, and by encouraging men to grow and learn a new skill set of empathy and honesty, with a nice, big, beautiful sexual incentive.

The Pussy Incentive

Pussy is so powerful that the patriarchy spends an excessive amount of time attempting to possess, control, and harness its goodness. They have poeticized it, romanticized it, standardized it, sanitized it, regulated it, bought and sought it, killed for it, begged for it, and tried endless avenues to gain entrance. The desire for it is immense and drives an overpowering arrogance, in an age-old attempt to control women. This is a completely ridiculous proposition in Mother Nature's paradigm.

Only the desire for pussy can override the fear of it.

Herein lies a woman's power and her portal to liberation. Because reproductive freedom has been legislated away, a woman's choice (and freedom) only exists as to whether she has sex, or not. So how about not?

Think about it.

Once you have sex, and he leaves his man-stuff inside of you, and if one of his guys takes up residence inside an egg of yours, you are going to have a baby. Depending on where you live and how much money you have, your future is determined, at least for the next 9 months.

In some states, whether or not you want to, whether or not he participates (completely his choice unless you sue him for paternity), whether your body is capable or not of a healthy delivery, whether or not you have an income, a home, emotional or financial support ... it does not matter, you are going to have a baby. You will be judged for having sex and getting pregnant, and like Eve, you will pay the price of what he left inside of you, yet another mess he can walk away from, but YOU must clean up.

Consider:

If women worldwide, or at least nationwide, forced celibacy upon men - denying them pussy - until they evolve, would there be a massive paradigm shift? Of course, for this to be effective, men who love women and support their equality would embrace celibacy and defend it, if need be, to their bros. If all feminists, male and female, supported equality, it would happen. Would removing all possibility of getting laid until maybe they could see the error of their ways; maybe in their planning on how to score, they might include learning respect for the planet and every living thing on it; maybe missing doing it will aid them in expanding compassion for women and feeling remorse about their misguided participation in oppression, persecution, and murder. And when through their evolution and understanding of how women get equal pay and an equal say about their bodies and their person, and when women's bodies are 100% off-limits to legislators, sexual access with consent is reinstated, and everyone is happy.

It's ridiculous even to have to assert that in 2025, in the United States of America, women are not free. It's as enraging as it is humiliating.

It's embarrassing that the men who are asserting this fallacy were born and raised by women. They were not breastfed! Or if they were, it was replaced with Bud Light by toddlerhood. And they, too, were raised on the Kool-Aid of (white) patriarchal superiority, and many cannot see their privilege. They believe in their superiority, and although they benefit from it, the benefit doesn't extend to others.

Without consideration of other human beings or empathy (of course, representing a deficit of feminine energy), and instead of extending to others the benefits of the freedoms they enjoy, they alternatively bring arrogant control over the freedom of others. Even their wives and mothers. And daughters.

Beyoncé: 'Okay, ladies, now let's get 'In Formation.' Hasn't misogyny overstayed its welcome by, oh, a few millennia? It's written in the fabric of everything.

How do women continue to extend grace to men for these horrific actions against their mothers, wives, daughters, sisters, cousins, and all the good women of the world? How do you live alongside a man who would treat you badly, expect sex from you, or make you responsible to him like his mama was to his Daddy? Or your mama was to your Daddy?

How do you show up for yourself in the context of his disapproval? Do you extend YOUR disapproval of the way he treats you? What are your private thoughts about your happiness, and what control can you assert to protect your pursuit of it? Can you live your life, make choices for your happiness, and still be with him? Would he support that?

Or would he assert control by utilizing his disapproval to control you, giving your daily dose of anxiety, tying your gut in knots, making you want to vomit?

Do you detect the patriarchal playbook using a Toxic Masculinity Menu of Bad Male Behavior to keep control? The put-downs, the threats of you being destitute, the disdain - the feeling of contempt you pick up from him as he glares at you across the dinner table? Where in your body do you feel this, and how do you care for yourself when it happens?

Got Misogyny?

But what if women joined together in solidarity to address these egregious acts against them and their ancestors? What if women took charge of directing the flow of attention and energy in relationships - families, communities, and governments - and laid the groundwork for their daughters to feel safer and more appreciated, to be exalted by men in the culture, rather than oppressed and killed?

And what an improved gene pool!

What if giving the patriarchy a natural consequence for its egregious actions against women and an incentive to do the right thing moving forward is the ticket Mother Nature has in mind: a universal in-flight self-correction, asserted by women, the givers of life, to men who have assumed superiority and dominated the development of culture worldwide.

So here's the idea:

The Pussy Initiative or PI:

- Any man who does not fully support female democracy does not deserve admittance to any woman's portal.

- No man deserves pussy until all men deserve pussy.

- Men must demonstrate an understanding of the criteria of the PI by passing coursework on how to treat women with respect.

- Every man must graduate the coursework with a C average because, face it, a lot of men are just too thick to absorb new things.

Men learning a modicum of respect for women in all areas of life would right everything wrong with the world today. Everyone in the world would be far happier and healthier.

Mother Nature would flourish.

Laws would reflect compassion for women; there would be no legislation regarding women's bodies, as men would finally realize they have zero jurisdiction in that area. Domestic violence would become a thing of the past. Ignorance and gun worship might fall away as men are forced out of their primitive caveman mentality and into a New Age of mutual respect and egalitarianism.

If obtaining access to the portal is desired, no more knuckle-dragging, chest-beating, and domineering behaviors and attitudes. No more bad male behavior. Men learning to respect women has not been a cultural norm until now. By controlling the(ir) currency, women take their power back. What an amazing incentive for positive change!

Think about it! NO PUSSY for men as long as they:

Legislate women's bodies

Turn a blind eye to domestic violence

Ignore violence and gun worship

Act as arrogant idiots whose knuckles drag the ground

And while this is happening, it could become even more matriarchal and universal - like an era in which women will protect their portal until men collectively correct themselves.

Pussy is a precious gift. Protecting this sweetness of life from men who would assert dominance or superiority is an obvious power move. And one well within every woman's prerogative to execute. It's time for men to man up. Real man up, straighten up, stand up, speak up, and do better.

If there are good men, they have not done enough. They have not built a world that respects the balance of the feminine.

The desire for sex could motivate men to do better, be better, and evolve, already! Women can create a learning era with an environment of 'sexual fasting' for men to figure out some things on their own.

And with pussy as an incentive, the sky's the limit! Women can tackle world hunger, war, and corruption simply by controlling who, what, when, and where she gives access to portals.

Sweet as Sugar PI

See the power of the portal? Your portal? Balance to the planet - restored, and all you must do is protect your pussy! And take care of yourself independently of Daddy or one of his minions.

The problem is, as you know, some women sign over their pussy power for the diamond ring and promise of staying home and raising the children. Do they undervalue their pussy if all it's worth is a diamond ring? And it's awesome if motherhood is your genuine jam and a heartfelt desire, and you are not vibing to the patriarchal assessment of your worth.

(That might take some contemplation because the 'motherhood pressure' is so pervasive and insidious that it can be difficult to separate what you want from what has been assumed for you.)

Remember, having babies is what Daddy wants you to do; it's why you're here; it's your 'calling.'

If you are confused, give yourself time - something you might already feel pressured about - that biological clock ticking ... don't worry. You've got time.

Take your time!

Chapter 8 Playlist

You Make Me Sick! (Ashnikko)

When Will I Be Mine? (Hailey Orion)

STUPID! (Ashnikko)

Labour (Paris Paloma)

Don't Hurt Yourself (Beyoncé)

Little Girl Gone (Chinchilla)

what it means to be a girl (EMELINE)

Chapter 8 Self-Care Suggestions

Look for signs and symbols, the magic all around you daily ... a wayward butterfly lands on your windshield while you're stopped at a traffic light, a flower growing out of a crack in the sidewalk, a birdsong that wakes you in the morning, catching every green light on your commute through town, songs that speak directly to you, lyrics ... look for the glimmers every single day.

In Mother Nature's paradigm, the love notes abound! Look to Nature and be moved by her awesomeness. And get healing in the meantime.

Continue learning about symbols:

Buy oracle or tarot cards. Explore the Moon Woman Oracle cards for a Native American perspective - one that honors women, Mother Earth, and the various stages of a woman's life.

Research Quantum Field Theory. Who are you in a parallel universe? In the quantum field?

Research near-death experiences, called NDEs. Don't be afraid to think new thoughts or allow suppositions to shake firmly held beliefs ... let it be okay to question and wonder...

Find what resonates with your natural curiosity. Palmistry? Google a palm reading expert. Crystals? Read about their vibes. Do you have a green thumb? Want to accumulate plants? Embrace your inner wood nymph!

For fun, take the patriarchal pet names quiz on the next page! Which ones are you?

Circle all that apply:

Airhead	Birdbrain	Coyote Ugly
Amazon	Bitch	Crone
Baby Girl	Blabbermouth	Cunt
Baby Mama	Black Girl	Deb Debutante
Bad Ass	Bobblehead	Dependent
Bad Bitch	Boss Bitch	Dirty Girl
Bad Boss Bitch	Bridezilla	Diva
Bad Girl	Bubblehead	Dominatrix
Baddie	Butch	Dowd
Ball Breaker	Cat Lady	Dragon Lady
Ball Buster	Chatterbox	Dudette
Battle Ax	Chick	Dyke
Bestie	Cock Tease	Fan Girl
BFF	Concubine	Fat Girl
Biddy	Cougar	Felicia
Bimbo	Courtesan	Feminazi

Fishwife

Flapper

Floozie

Frump

Gabber

Gal

Girl

Gold-digger

Good Girl Bad Girl

Goodie 2 Shoes

Gossip

Grandma

Grandmother

Groupie

Hag

Hag

Harlot

Hellcat

Homecoming Queen

Hoochie

Hoochie Mama

Hooker

Hussy

Hysterical

Ingénue

Jailbait

Jezebel

Karen

Know-it-all

Lady

Lesbo

Libber

Loudmouth

Magdalene

Maid

Maiden

Mama

Mamasita

Man Hater

Man-eater

Man-hater

MISS

Mom

Mommy

Mother

MRS

MS

Nag

Nana

Nancy

Nasty Girl

Nasty Woman

Nymphette

Nympho

Playgirl

Pollyanna

Pregnant

Princess

Prude

Punkette

Punnani

Pussy

Queen

Scank

Seductress

Sexpot

Sheila

Shemale

Shiksa

Shopaholic

Shrew

Single

Sis

Slut

Spinster

Stay-at-home Mom

Street Walker

Sugar

Suzy Homemaker

Tart

The Other Woman

Tom Boy

Trad Wife

Tramp

Trollop

Trophy Wife

Twat

Vamp

Waif

Welfare Queen

Wench

White Girl

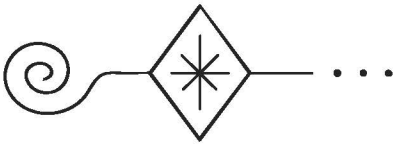
Whore

Widow

Wife

Woman

Yenta



STEP 9:

Know Better, Be Better, Do Better

Once free, as free as you can be as a woman in the USA, you must influence other women and men, especially the men in your life. After unlearning the wrong stuff, the propaganda of the patriarchy, and the subsequent pain and anger in recognizing that Daddy has been standing on your neck, it's time to get busy with reparenting, reprogramming, and replenishing with good, vital, feminine energy.

It turns out it's mother who knows best: the older, wiser part of your psyche, the Wise Mind, the inner grandmother, the one who may have led you to read this book.

Embracing the fear of being alone and discovering that you are okay, that you are safe, is a milestone.

Surpassing the myth of dependency on men is liberating yet scary! Instead of feeding the 'what ifs' that arise (what if I never find a man ...?), why not nurture the 'let's go' aspect of your psyche?

Read women's poetry. Devour feminist texts. Research spirituality. Delve into mysticism. Journal. Talk to your inner child - what made her dance?

The endeavors to know yourself and to define what you like and dislike (not necessarily what you grew up believing you liked ...) are essential in a better understanding of who you are and what you are here to do, to be, and who you choose to love secondarily to yourself. (Remember, 'Love Thy Neighbor as Thyself ...' right?).

Loving yourself is the template for loving your neighbor. Or a partner. Self-love and knowledge come with time and experience, suspending negative self-talk and internalized misogyny, living life and doing things with people who could be friends, listening to your gut, and believing the messages she sends you. Only you are the recipient of these messages.

Trust them.

What does self-care mean to you? More than a mani-pedi? Many women view self-care as the maintenance of their physical form: tending to the beautification of the face, hair, hands, feet, body, and fashion - and all those are fun, indeed! It is nourishing to look and feel as good as possible in your body. However, there is more to self-care than just caring for your physical form.

What about your mind and emotions? How are you feeling spiritually? How do you tend to these vital parts of you? Do you feel fear or confusion? Because girls are raised to believe they need protection, the fear of being alone, on your own, thinking your thoughts, and feeling your feelings can seem overwhelming.

Fear wells up. What will you do to take care of yourself?

Face these feelings, for starters. See them for the lie that they are. You are okay. You got this. You can trust yourself. A good cry is self-care. Afterward, ask yourself, 'What do I need right now to feel ok?'

Recognizing the betrayal by those who love you, like Daddy, calls for a purging release. But you can't get stuck in those feelings of defeat and devaluation. Becoming aware of this misogyny is stepping out of it, and once you are out of that box, you must press onward in your quest for self-discovery and self-autonomy.

Reaching other girls and women still in their boxes is rewarding.

Do You Got a Friend?

What makes a good female friend? What makes YOU a good female friend? For starters, feeling loved and accepted for who you are is everything. Some women don't experience that in the family of origin, so extending that to a female friend or experiencing that in your female relationships is deeply gratifying.

Having one or two friends who give each other respect and acceptance provides an intimate connection that may have been absent in primary family relationships and marriages. Your 'Bestie' sees and accepts you, wants your freedom of expression, validates you, recognizes and supports your dreams, encourages your pursuits, and is present for the hard stuff.

And you reciprocate.

Historically, women formed friendships to replace family connections after marrying and moving away from their homes. Giving up your name (identity), home, and family connections to move in with your husband is the first of a lifetime of sacrifices you become willing to make; marriage and motherhood - the ultimate sacrifice - is embedded in the marital contract. It often carried a non-verbal agreement to follow your husband as the head of the household, putting his decisions above your own. Chances are, he's a dumbass, and even if he's not, he is no expert in your happiness. And if you put all your happiness eggs in his basket, you are listening to the wrong message.

Only you know how to walk your path; even if you still haven't found your voice, you are the only one who can.

What happened to female friendships in your life? Are they solid? What do you do to maintain the good vibes among your homies? If you have a posse, you are lucky!

Women aren't always nice to each other, as you know, remembering the crabs in your bucket! Beginning in middle school, the mean girl brigade emerges, and they are you and you and you. A competition of patriarchal proportions unfolds, and suddenly, there are bitches as far as the eye can see, all sharing an everyday internalized misogyny.

Yeah, women used to braid each other's hair while they bled together. Ever wonder what happened to that?

Husbands happened, for one. And the patriarchal putting a woman in her place happened. Once Daddy assumed a superior position in the relationship, he assigned your position as one of sacrifice, starting with resting during your period and braiding your Bestie's hair.

Sisterhood is Powerful

A scared patriarchy needed to find a way to challenge and weaken these female coalitions. Break up the coven. Disperse the magic. Can't have unions!

Over time, as women began to assert choice in the spousal selection process, perhaps the patriarchy responded by creating an ad campaign in search of the perfect mate, turning a once cooperative group of friends into ruthless competitors of self-loathing perfectionists.

Fold in impossible beauty standards costing beaucoup bucks, create an industry to support these standards, and pit women against each other in an ongoing competition to meet these standards for male attention.

You need good women friends more than you need a man.

Studies have shown that the reason women not only live longer than men, but also tend to be happier in their later years, is due to their connection with other women.

It's a superpower.

There is nothing better than hanging with your besties, levitating above the beauty box given by the patriarchy, looking down on that shitty paradigm, understanding the lie, and knowing better. And braiding each other's hair, feeding each other's growth. Sisterhood.

Chapter 9 Playlist

yes, and (Ariana Grande)

Freedom (Beyoncé)

Persuasive (Doechii, SZA)

Survivor (Snoblack)

Pretty Girl Magic (Moonlight Scorpio)

Medicine Woman (Qveen Herby)

Chapter 9 Self-Care Suggestions

Many awesome interventions have been suggested on these pages. Every suggestion, song, or reference has been vetted for a soul-moving message made available from one sister to another in this matriarchal undertaking of the motherly makeover/takeover.

Of everything.

This undertaking is only as successful as you make it in your circle. You prioritize your best interests, protecting your portal from anyone who does not fully embrace your autonomy.

Revisit suggestions from a previous chapter and try something new.

Stock good food: Delicious nourishment with healthful treats is a must. (Yay, dark chocolate!) If you don't know how to cook, learn. A few yummy recipes might light a fire of culinary creativity. You might love cooking for yourself as part of an exquisite self-care routine!

Your care and feeding are vital to your health and happiness. Chances are you've cooked for others - cooking for number one can be another liberating experience. There are no rules in your kitchen.

Read some quantum field theory and some Native American poetry, meditate, dance, and love all things about yourself, about being female.

STEP 10:

Come to Jesus, Drip, Drip, Drip, or Both

Declaring your independence is a process, and in the matriarchal paradigm, Daddy's feelings are taken into consideration, of course. It would be difficult NOT to be sensitive to Daddy. You love him. You're attached to him or have been. It hasn't been all bad. Daddy's not a BAD PERSON, but his historical and international club of peers is an intolerable, deplorable bunch.

This is your life you are saving, okay? If that seems dramatic, consider that you are liberating yourself from the need to please him. You are setting your sights on the path to the life you want to create. He might say you're being selfish. There may be a chorus of patrons of the patriarchy that echoes the 'you're being selfish' refrain.

'Thank You for Noticing'

Self-love might seem selfish to someone who would control you. Why else would anyone discourage you from pursuing your independence … because Daddy 'worries' for your safety?

Who does Daddy think he is? Why would his needs precede yours? Where would he get that idea? What have you been tolerating? Placating? Why? Because you were taught to please Daddy so that you are in his good graces, and you get all those perks of being his 'Little Girl,' or his favorite pet.

Why do you need Daddy? You have YOU!

Embracing this will empower you in your conversation with Daddy about your departure from his house. Remember, above all, you are not asking for Daddy's permission or approval or even validation of your exit, whether it is a physical exit or an emotional, mental, or spiritual flight you are taking - it's your decision to make and yours alone. Yours to reap what you are sowing.

Wrap the shit sandwich in a bow. 'Mansplain' this: You're not property. You belong to nobody. Your choices are yours to make, as well as your mistakes.

Reject titles and declare independence from the paradigm of self-sacrifice. It's time to figure out who you are and what you like, need, and want from a partner. You are allowed to make mistakes and make in-flight corrections.

It's what everybody does, how everybody grows, and by everybody - men. Don't expect perfection from yourself or decisiveness or clarity, just that you get it done.

Option 1

The Come to Jesus method: You lay out for Daddy the level of your discontent. You have discovered an oppressive paradigm that no longer fits you, a stifling box you have outgrown, and you have no interest in continuing the charade that Daddy knows best. This is a balls-out approach to standing up and advocating for yourself to 'The Person' who possibly hid You from yourself for years.

This is exceedingly difficult for a good girl, Daddy's girl, to pull off. Standing up to Daddy has likely gotten you in trouble. Finding your voice was never encouraged. You may be unclear about the depth of the Daddy wound, only that you have one and want your freedom from the Daddy paradigm.

You are ready to draw that line in the sand. You confront him. You may escalate, you may cry, he may get angry or upset, he may cry - it could be one of those family events preserved in the family tree's pages as a bold, independent move a woman made for her autonomy and that of future generations of females in your lineage.

The Come to Jesus option is not for the faint of heart or extreme people pleasers. The advantages are that once you have blown up the idea that you are a dutiful daughter destined to be Daddy's girl, you stop sacrificing yourself for the patriarchy.

You have laid the groundwork for your path and your freedom. There will likely be anger and tears, yours, his, your mother's - but your descendants will applaud you. Your freedom is their freedom.

With any luck, your Daddy will be proud of you demonstrating bravery and independence.

Hopefully, he will lift you and encourage you to carve out your happiness and go your own way. But if he doesn't do that, you are okay with proceeding. You don't need Daddy's approval to strike out and find your way to happiness. (You're making your own money, right?)

'Speak your mind even if your voice shakes,' said Maggie Kuhn, an American activist in the 1990s. It's even more applicable today.

But not all women are ready to confront the Daddy paradigm directly, and that's okay.

Women are generally not taught that skill set. You were likely not taught to stand up to authority figures and might still be learning how to do that. Some women don't discover that skill set until their Momma Bear emerges with her firstborn child.

Advocating for her child gives even a shy woman a taste of empowerment to effect changes for her child. For some, it's a new feeling that can also be applied to grow a self-advocacy skill set. Learning and asserting self-advocacy in increments gives way to the 'drip, drip, drip' method of educating Daddy on the new independent you.

Option 2

The drip, drip, drip method is more of a case-by-case scenario. And rather than flipping the dinner table in a Come to Jesus confrontation, you instead bring Daddy along, educating him on his lack of authority over you, reminding him of your grown-ass woman status, and to please refrain from giving you unsolicited advice. You set him straight every time he is wrong in his assumption of superiority. He may be older than you and wiser in the ways of his world, but he is not an expert in you. He does not know your heart or feel the happiness that pursuing your bliss brings.

Of course, you are not seeking to burn the bridge to Daddy, only to blow up the part that gives him authority over your decisions in life. This boils down primarily to 2 things (assuming you are financially independent from him):

1) Daddy's temperament and

2) Your delivery. Beware the debate when Daddy mansplains you are wrong! Drip, drip and not allowing too much room for discussion coming from Daddy.

Long explanations and defensive emotional arguments are more of the patriarchal run-around, getting you flustered and upset, exerting dominance over your voice or style or words - remember, Daddy's been talking circles around you since Day 1!

The key is in the planning. Don't allow time for discussion, as this is not up for debate. You are 'dripping' the corrective language, idea, rule, and decision, as a matter of fact, with a smile and an exit strategy.

Explanations are a dictate of the patriarchy, from which you are freeing yourself - the explanation is your statement of a fact.

Try these:

I'll be home late. Don't wait up.

I'm having dinner with Marsha.

I'm not going to church.

Not tonight.

I don't want that, like that, feel that, believe that, need that, I didn't say that ...

I'm not you. I think and feel separately from you. I am myself.

I'm in charge of my happiness. I make choices for myself, and I can change my mind.

I bought a new pair of shoes.

I'm going dancing.

I want a divorce.

If you're dealing with a dangerous temperament, permit yourself to get out safely. You owe no explanations to get yourself free from a tenuous situation. Don't allow any belief system about 'face-to-face' conversation if aggression is a possible outcome. If you fear a blow-up, complete a safety plan with a friend, including a place to go and money to get you through.

Or try these sample 'Dear John' leaving Daddy letters:

Dear Daddy,

Unfortunately, I must resort to a letter to you because it is the best and safest way for me to communicate with you. In our discussions, I rarely feel heard and understood; instead, I feel minimized and dismissed, even attacked, like my voice is not heard, my message isn't getting through, or I'm just plain invisible.

This letter is to let you know your control of me ends today.

Whether or not I stay here with you depends mainly on how this letter is received. I have matured and no longer need an authority figure to tell me what to do. I can make my own decisions. Thank you for aiding me when I thought I needed it.

I realized what had been true all along: I am an independent being who creates my own path. I deserve to pursue that happily and with dignity.

From here on out, I may change or rearrange my life as I come to realize what I am here to accomplish to a greater and greater degree, and what brings me joy.

Are you a part of that? Or have you impeded my self-love and self-care? Are you encouraging me to take to the skies and pursue my dreams? Or do you prefer I keep your dinner warm?

OR Dear John,

I've had enough of this life. You'll be hearing from my lawyer. Thank you, next.

(Remember, of course, that you don't have to defend or justify to him or anyone that you are making a change simply because you're not happy and you've decided to make a change.)

The pursuit of your happiness is a compelling reason to change course.

OR

Dear John,

I've tried to make this work. I've asked for your help, your love, and your partnership, and I even asked for us to get help when I felt things were going awry. I'm way past that now. Your sudden willingness to address these issues now, after so long and so much of my unhappiness, is not enough to deter me from pursuing my freedom. My happiness did not seem to matter to you. I have decided that it's my responsibility to pursue my own happiness. This pursuit no longer includes you.

OR

Dear Daddy,

I see things very differently now than when I was a little girl. It took time to unravel the person I thought you wanted me to be from the woman I discovered I am. Leaving you and growing up took years beyond simply leaving your house. That was only the beginning. There were the years of devaluing myself (dumb kid), of choosing and putting the needs of narcissistic partners before my own (Daddy knows best), feeling a profound sense of confusion and unhappiness with my life, chiseled from your image of me. Why wouldn't you want me to be myself? I know why I'm so goddamn angry.

After reexamining a lifetime of memories stored by a little girl, I found a reservoir of unshed tears of an ugly, dumb kid taught to live with discomfort, drink poison, and laugh at her gaping wounds. Funny stories, examined under the microscope of self-reflection, reveal deep cuts - my role in the family, the brunt of the joke, scapegoat, Cinderella with an evil stepmother ... internalized villains that travel in packs in my brain. For years, I worked under the pretense that I was an ugly idiot, a pathetic Olive Oyl of a girl whose most outstanding value is allowing herself to be the joke.

My true gifts were suppressed and, in their place, a thick skin with puncture wounds and an open heart, bloodied and yearning for connection. The villains in my brain are powerful and pervasive; having had years of influence and experience in self-sabotage, it was difficult to recognize and identify that they were not on my side. Because they were you. But it was your narcissism that was the culprit in the dismantlement of my mother's psyche and the near suffocation of mine. We won't even guess the impact of your narcissism on my brother, who suffered from Stockholm syndrome, in the way he treated me.

I can easily pin on you the shit I am healing as the creator and instigator of the committee of villains. They are losing, though. And with your death, it becomes easier to shake off the disparaging energy you left me holding - the devaluation even in the mess you left me. You are the quiet monster; your spoils were my childhood of adoration through manipulation that covered a river of tears and the empty cave of my selfhood.

I am free of you. (I hope you're happy about that now.)

Love, Petta

Executing whatever form your Come to Jesus message takes, be it a letter, text, conversation, country song, or scream from the rooftop, it is essential. It might seem scary because Daddy is a monolith in your psyche. Goliath to your Davida, and you have some stones to throw.

Start quietly, if you must, within the privacy of your mind, confront the memories of ridicule, put-downs, or criticisms that still run through your mind. Feel the pain while you take baby steps to recognize the misogyny within the system that raised you.

Glennon Doyle says you can do hard things. You are addressing the inner misogyny currently flourishing worldwide and especially inside your head, in your psyche!

Self-loathing, limiting thoughts, and negative beliefs about your worth or path; empty or pointless criticism of your sisters; compliance with suppression in the 'go along to get along' culture, guaranteeing a handsome adjunctive spot in the patriarchal culture as The Cheerleader, The Good Wife, The Mom, the Wind beneath someone's wings.

To hell with that.

How about you take flight instead?

Chapter 10 Playlist

Labour (Paris Paloma)

Haute (Janelle Monáe)

Flowers (Miley Cyrus)

I AM WOMAN (Emmy Meli)

Mother's Daughter (Miley Cyrus)

War on Women (Delilah Bon)

Emotional Punching Bag (Meg Smith)

Chapter 10 Self-Care Suggestions

Think of a person with whom you have had a conflict. Maybe they harmed you or betrayed you, or maybe you did something to them that you regret. When you think of this person and what happened between you, the emotions rise, and you go through the same thought loop.

Like a pearl created from a grain of sand, your brain goes over the same story, reliving the experience in your mind's eye, thus reinforcing the pearl that is stuck in layers in your psyche. The pearl can become stuck in there for years, not necessarily painful, but it can be an irritant. And like a pearl, it's valuable once it's out. An 'exorcised' demon of the past.

You might not be able to change the history of what happened, but you can work with the emotional energy 'stuck' in your craw. Try this energetic forgiveness exercise:

After a couple of long, deep cleansing breaths, picture or visualize the face of the person, look directly into their eyes, focusing eye to eye, and say their name, then:

'I forgive you for all the pain you caused me.

I ask that you forgive me the pain I have caused you ...'

This energetic exercise creates a frequency or vibration of forgiveness and acceptance between yourself and the person because energy follows thought. Naturally, there have been previous thoughts of negativity toward the situation, but with the intention of healing and shifting your thinking, you might be surprised by how things change.

If you commit to this forgiveness meditation for 30 days, you are likely to experience a shift in your fixated narrative with this person with whom you have held a conflict. Try it. You have nothing to lose but a grudge.

STEP 11:

In Charge Of Happy

One person in the entire universe is responsible for your happiness. It's not Daddy. Think about that for a minute: Imagine how good your life could be if you invested in happiness for yourself instead of another person. Instead of giving away all that beautiful energy, why not invest it in yourself? What might be the result? Could it be greater happiness?

Think of the number of people you have attempted to make happy. Of course, there's Daddy - front and center. If you internalized Daddy's happiness as the most important thing (because Daddy is a narcissist?), you have a lie embedded in your psyche that's an obstacle to your happiness: you owe happiness to anyone other than yourself. If that sounds selfish, you could be brainwashed. Not only is making another person happy not your job, but it's also not possible in any long-lasting way. Happiness is not about having things or people. It's an internal state coming from the sense that everything is always working out for you. It is generated from within yourself, which then radiates good vibes, lifting others, making it a generous offering! Another compelling reason to focus on your own happiness.

Do you know what makes you happy? Did you think it would be the relationship? Did that turn out to be true? What is one way you could be a smidge happier today? Can that stretch out to tomorrow as well?

It's not selfish to ask questions to gain a deeper understanding of yourself, to expand your self-acceptance, and to love yourself unconditionally. You have always done your best in every given moment. To judge a younger version of yourself by what you know now is unloving and unproductive. Getting to know or remembering what makes you tick, what you love, and what lights you up - your favorite color (s), types of music, artists, and books that you enjoy, your fashion choices, and hair style/color? What is your unique history so far in this journey?

Knowing and accepting yourself is fundamental to your happiness.

Got Gratitude?

Ponder for a moment when you have felt the most profound gratitude of your life.

Reflect on it and recall the memories of that time. You were blissed out, brimming with gratefulness, beaming joy and happiness ... when was that? What brought you that experience? Can you not only remember the feeling but also feel it now? Can you conjure it up by remembering what initially got you there?

Gratitude is the vibe you want to cultivate. The health benefits linked to an attitude of gratitude are endless, from better sleep to a more robust immune system, slowed heart rate, and regulated breathing to synchronize with your heartbeat, and that's just the physical benefits. Expressing gratitude can decrease depressed mood, anxiety, and chronic pain. Look it up. Read about the health benefits of gratitude - if you're not feeling it, read about it, look for it in your life. Did you have a glass of clean water to drink today? Did you flush your toilet?

Service is a source of gratitude. Consider volunteering at a food bank, a battered women's shelter, or an animal shelter, and you will remember that no matter how bad your problems might seem, there is someone whose suffering can be eased with your kind word or deed. Plus, it's a reprieve from all the self-focus. Ruminating on your perceived problems only waters them in your brain, creating a thought garden of 'what ifs' flourishing on anxiety.

Gratitude begets abundance. Mother Nature blesses the children who appreciate her goodness and express that often through words and deeds. Continue to choose your happiness and cultivate a sense of gratitude. Keep leaving Daddy; you don't need an overlord even if married. Remember the person in charge of your happiness? It's you who brings the magic to your life. It always has been! You choose. You create. Love sets you free to be yourself. Full stop.

If leaving Daddy feels right, then how far can you take it? Daddy's reach has typically been all-encompassing, so a newfound freedom can feel both invigorating and dauntingly scary.

Because every thought you have ever had was under the hierarchical umbrella of the patriarchy, so having a cognitive reframe to a matriarchal way of thinking might seem, well, unimaginable!

Consider it a less sequential way of living day after day, the passing of Father Time, and it's more Mother Nature - a spiraling existence with no beginning and no end, where herstory repeats itself cycle after cycle, in seasons and rhythms, until mastery is achieved. Like an evolution?

Have you ever noticed your patterns? They represent your most significant learning opportunities. For example, do you pick the same Daddy to repeat the same relationship pattern? You probably picked a Daddy like your Daddy, and maybe continue to struggle with autonomy or lack of recognition of your full personhood. Maybe until you understand the life lesson and gain autonomy for the first time? It's all good, and ultimately, you gain access to a deeper understanding of who you are and why you are here. And since you are in charge, please take it to the limit, not just one more time, but as often as possible!

Changing the paradigm from patriarchal to matriarchal can be a fun experience. Can you imagine what that could look like? Instead of being 'ruled' by Father Time, where one second follows the next and every second counts, minute by minute, perhaps being present in the present, mindful, and authentic is a matriarchal approach to life.

Women live in cycles.

The 'Cycle' concept could be a comfortable reframe for patriarchal thinking because the matriarchal or feminine paradigm is cyclic. If the world had been built on a matriarchal paradigm, perhaps cycles and rhythms - the ebbs and flows of life forces, energies, moods, colors, and seasons - would have dominated worldviews and thoughts, flowing in harmony with nature's directives.

Imagine if your desire to feel empowered to live well matched the universal desire and, therefore, were shared by all humanity. Worries that people get to eat, (women feed their families first), are educated (children need to be in school), and doctors or professionals are available to assist. Housing, food, education, and healthcare are at the top of a mother's provisions for her children. If a matriarchal perspective were to blanket the planet, wouldn't these things be the focal point of governments? Not the acquisition of bigger, better, more; not the domination of others to submission; not killing people over ideology; not killing people at all; but sharing food, medicines, and provisions so that all families and children's needs are met. Even men's!

For decades, women have sought to emulate men to be treated equitably in the workforce.

Who knew that men needed to be more like women in their way of being powerful yet compassionate? Innovative yet collaborative? Creative yet loving?

With a matriarchal paradigm, the focus may shift away from material success and the money-making obsession of the patriarchy and toward the betterment of the community and the health and well-being of individuals and families. The world is liberated one soul at a time. (Today is your day, and tomorrow is yours to create.)

What would a matriarchal paradigm have created in the original concept of marriage? Instead of Daddy giving his daughter to a farmer with a son wanting to procreate, what if women were historically in the position of responsibly choosing a mate worthy of her portal? What if women were initially trusted to select a mate who matched their energy, desires, and vibe? Imagine the babies born to those couples - the real power couples.

Think about it. How would a matriarchal approach to a career unfold differently?

First, pursuing your bliss instead of a paycheck might be unabashedly okay. The most significant change might be choosing a job that brings you happiness, rather than focusing solely on earning a lot of money. Pursuing happiness through acquiring more of everything has proven to be empty. What makes you happy? What do material possessions represent? Self-worth? Self-respect? It's more important to discover the underlying need and meet that rather than get the diamond, the Tesla, the next thing, and the thing after that …

Mama says you might need to get a divorce first.

Daddy and his religion taught you it's a sin. Damnable by hell? Through the church, you learned that leaving him is a damnable sin at worst and a social pariah at best. People will judge you, and no doubt, some people judge divorce. Some people would have you believe that marriage requires you to make him happy, to give up sex to him when he wants it, and that it's your responsibility to manage his sexual needs. No real mention of your sexual needs in the patriarchal paradigm. In fact, the female orgasm was of NO significant importance until the latter half of the 20th century. Instead, the focus has been on the importance of managing his sexual needs in the exact way he wants, but not at inopportune times, like in school, at church, or at the office. That's not sexy; that's slutty.

Show your boobs, but don't turn him on. (Remember the dress code in middle school, where your bare shoulder might cause a teenage boy to get an erection, so the patriarchy said it's your responsibility to manage his libido, just like Eve did in the Garden ...?)

Did this ring true to you? Because girls get some hard-core conditioning early on - pleasing Daddy behaviors - around sex and pleasure that take some time and intention to heal. (see playlists!)

Claiming or reclaiming your sexuality as 100% under your control. When, where, who, how much, for how long - all your complete choice with your consent - hopefully, you're begging for it if he has any skill! The hijacking of sex by the patriarchy is most upsetting and egregious. And the reason for the needed sexual drought for men. Men must get a grip on themselves. Literally. Bad male behavior needs to stop.

If any man is interested in evolving from bad male behavior and becoming an ally to the cause of empowering women, first and foremost, simply listen to women. Believe it or not, men often pay no attention to what a woman has to say. Asking a man to be a better listener seems 'matronizing,' doesn't it? But listening is NOT a simple skill. Feeling heard would be a vast improvement for women everywhere. At work and at home.

A Word to Men

(To any man who might read these words: Listen up. There's a reason the term 'mansplaining' was coined. Please assess your assertion of superiority or authority in your relationship with the woman in your life. It can be subtle, so dig deep.)

Shut the hell up and listen to your woman. Be mindful of what she's saying, maybe nod your head on occasion, and ask a simple follow-up question - not to stump her! Not to be a contrarian, or to prove her wrong, but to show interest, and here's the thing - BE INTERESTED in what she says. Not to debate or refute or fix, but to understand. If what she is saying is boring you, consider that you are not connecting with her - where is your empathy or ability to dial in? If you can alter this behavior, it will automatically make you a better man in every arena of life!

Once you 'get it' and learn to be in the moment with your woman without the need to interrupt or control the conversation, the narrative, and the total environment, feel free to spread the word to your bros. Turn this shit around and show women respect in all walks of life. Mic drop.

Until then, no pussy for you!

A Word to Women

You are responsible for your happiness. Not the man in your life. If he impedes your freedom to pursue happiness, you should leave him. It doesn't take years to figure that out - listen to your gut. She could be screaming at you. Mama wants you to give your gut some proper attention; that is, when you know the cause of a problem, please don't be afraid to alleviate it. Don't be scared to disappoint Daddy when it comes to your self-care. Creating an environment that nurtures and soothes you against the world's sharp edges is number 1 in the matriarchal paradigm. Anything from a new comforter, a new wall color, or a divorce - whatever it takes to create a home environment that brings you peace.

You deserve peace.

And joy.

And music. Turn up the volume.

You want to dispense of that eggshell carpet and hang a piece of art.

Good Vibrations

Choosing happiness for yourself might be a bridge too far. If you have spent a lifetime (so far) sacrificing for Daddy, changing your habitual response can be challenging. Chances are, you are SO GOOD at self-sacrifice, the thought of doing exactly WHAT YOU WANT feels all wrong!

Consider that successful patriarchal conditioning! Maybe there's a better way to 'ease' into supreme self-care and Self-Love that you might allow yourself without the critical inner (patriarchal) voice. Here's the magic solution. Tend to your vibe! What makes you happier in this moment? Happier = good vibrations!

It's Frequency, Baby!

Good, good, good, good vibrations! Bop Bop!

They are all around you daily and in you and are created by you. Close your eyes and connect with the sweet vibration within you that is Your True Self. Or step outside, look around, and feel Mother Nature's gifts. Good vibrations are everywhere when you train your brain to seek that instead of its opposite!

Shift focus from what is wrong in your world to what is right, what you are grateful for, and what you deserve and want more of, all in service to your highest good. Forget about 'figuring everything out' and simply Be in your energy in the moment. Acceptance of the moment and recognizing its opportunity is the pathway to your ultimate happiness and fulfillment. Breathe in. Breathe out.

Your gut can lead the way to liberation from the patriarchal rule over your heart and mind. If your gut is suffering and your mood is blue with a low vibe, do something for your vibe.

What lifts your spirit? Make a list if you haven't already. At the end of the chapter, there are suggestions if you're having trouble identifying 'vibe elevators.'

Age of Aquarius

Albert Einstein said the future of medicine is frequency. Vibration.

As the Age of Aquarius moves into the neighborhood, there is a shift from a materialistic pursuit to a focus on frequency - the new currency of vibration. It's less about how much money you make as the matriarchal paradigm takes effect and more about your frequency. What vibe will you embody moving forward into the years to come when calm becomes the new abundant?

Since materialism is heavy and 'hoardy' (look at the white male billionaires and their greedy preoccupations) and does not yield happiness (as many rich people have attested), high vibration is light and airy and brings blissful feelings, so ... it's time to lighten up! Turn up! Look up! Rise up!

Permitting yourself to follow a kinder, gentler (more creative) path than the one the patriarchy has laid out for you is an automatic vibe enhancer. Who, better than you, knows what lifts you, makes you happy, and floats your boat? Who, better than you, can give this to you?

Treating your vibe is fun, pure, and simple. It is as easy as making yourself happy and making changes that reflect the love you have for yourself. You talk the talk and walk the walk with confidence and poise.

You know how to take exquisite care of yourself, and you're not afraid to do it. You're not afraid to be alone because you are your best friend and caregiver! You are discerning about your precious energy, particularly about how you spend time and with whom! You take care of your body like it's a puppy that is entrusted to you - providing all the care, feeding, and stimulation your little friend needs to feel happy. You buy flowers. Dance naked in your living room to all the songs you love.

Bring color to your life and music and decorate your space - beautify your lair so that it welcomes you when you enter. Incense, candles, and flowers all contribute to the positive energy of your environment. And, of course, art.

Reinterpret for yourself your worth and value. Align yourself with strong women in your life who love you, not the mean ones carrying water for men, but your soul sisters.

Align yourself with a spiritual female energy. Do some research. Remember, light emanated from DARKNESS - or all that is feminine. Explore the mystery that is the unknown parts of yourself, your creative drive, or your desire to be connected to the big picture and expansion.

Stop Being Small!

Chapter 11 Playlist

Run the World (Beyonce)

Pretty Girls Walk (Big Boss Vette)

I Am (feat. Flo Mili)

Sad Bitch Bad Bitch (iyla)

Marie Antoinette (Qveen Herby)

Chapter 11 Self-Care Suggestions

Creativity: Journal your feelings, write poetry (even if you think it's terrible), draw, paint, sew, craft, make a vision board, a dream journal, knit, crochet, dance or move your body in primal ways - squat, jump - take up space.

Meditate and expand your consciousness to the edges of the universe as far as you can imagine. Visualize your chakras - research how artists depict them in images; find chakra meditations on YouTube.

Work with sound vibrations, tones, chants, or mantras - see what resonates for you.

Find a place for a sound bath or play one on YouTube.

Take a long walk. Look up. Count the messages sent to you from Mother Nature whether a yellow butterfly or a dandelion growing out of a crack in the concrete; everywhere there are sweet reminders of your connectedness.

You have never been untethered.

Postscript

It's time for some big discipline from Mother Nature and the installation of the feminine paradigm and the training cannot come from the patriarchal playbook. The recent surge of toxic masculinity to the highest offices in the world is nothing more than a primal chest-beating attempt to hold onto ultimate control.

But guess who these Neanderthals sleep with, who they look to for approval, who they want to fornicate with, and, ultimately, who listens to the mansplaining and the demands for more of everything? Uh ...any woman who will have them? Don't let that be you! These men are armed and dangerous and are driving the greed and corruption bus off the cliff of human existence. And every one of the patriarchal dinosaurs was birthed and raised by women!

WTF happened there?

The patriarchy molds women to serve, never to lead. The mothers of these men (who believe in their sons' superiority) need remediation. They are undoubtedly a miserable lot, maybe rich in diamonds but bereft of Self and spirit.

Truth. The patriarchal playbook helped many women survive – water-bearers for Daddy's regime, the women who serve the needs of Daddy with much self-sacrifice in hopes of sharing in the spoils of greed and domination. Or at the very least, be a stay-at-home mom and get out of the rat race to raise the children and keep the home fires burning. Having been conditioned to sacrifice herself for the good of her husband and children, she is a shadow of herself, and by abdicating her power to the patriarchy, she will sadly never have her own voice and will settle for crumbs from Daddy's table in the form of money and power in the trickle-down theory of sharing. Her life is scripted, and on Sunday, the family goes to church to hear messages about where the lines are and how to stay within them, how to act like a lady. Otherwise, you could be deemed 'a nasty woman,' a 'feminazi,' 'too independent ...' or - god forbid – 'a crazy cat lady.'

She gave up her autonomy, and in today's world, women's independence is a necessity. It's time to address the collective need for women to step out of their fear of men and into their power with love and leadership. Had there been a balance between men and women from the beginning, the planet's health would not be hanging by a thread, and humanity would not be on a collision course with extinction.

What about you? Are you living your path or someone else's? Your gut knows. Of course, you love your children (if you have them) and make daily sacrifices for them - that's expected, for a time. And you should feel good about that. Good job, mama! But if it becomes an expectation of ongoing sacrifice that you habitually make, you may be going too far for too long. And if you are reading these words, it's safe to assume a reassessment of your world is in progress.

Reassessing should be safe, secure, and private. It's okay to think and feel what you've denied yourself - even guilt. Note it. This is self-discovery. Mother Nature blesses and encourages the recognition of your True Self, who is beautiful and worthy of being seen, heard, and expressed. The one that maybe the world doesn't see or hear from as much. And if, one by one, women shift focus from meeting the needs of men and start honoring themselves and their portals, Mother Nature would rejoice, her needs elevated in the collective concern of humanity: her custodians, her children. Under the current patriarchal authority, the planet is hanging by a thread. Men suck at housekeeping. Misplaced priorities and unauthorized arrogance have clouded their contribution. Sure, they 'built the world,' but now they are burning it down and starving its children.

So here's the question:

Who would you be if you had not been programmed to be a good girl, friendly and sweet, pleasing and accommodating? What if Daddy's little girl became Her Own Woman?

What if you'd been raised to choose happiness? What if you were raised to choose your unabashed needs first? Or even the ability to identify them?

What if you had strong female role models, uncompromising in pursuit of their happiness - whether it's a career path, goddess unfoldment, or artistic pursuit - and they encouraged you to pursue whatever you want?

What if you only heard encouraging words from your committee as you thought about and pondered this? What if you trusted yourself to make decisions and own up to mistakes, like the grown woman you are?

What if you were calling the shots in your life?

You can be all that you want to be now. You can start over and re-parent yourself with an abundance of self-love and a developing sense of trust in your Self, and your Wise Mind. And if you listen closely, you'll hear Mother Nature's whisper of reassurance to you of a profound love that grows exponentially with each passing season. Hear it?

Follow your Bliss, Friend! You got this!

Acknowledgements:

Bruce McAllister - Coach, Cheerleader, Exorcist, Editor, without whom this book would never have come to be. A heartfelt thank-you, and an encouraging word to any writer yet to write: Bruce is your guy!
bruce@mcallistercoaching.com

Greta Schmidt - Artist, Designer, Nature Enthusiast, and all-around wonderful human being designed the cover, title pages, and overall look of 11 Steps.
greta@mycreativecondition.com

George Graf - Life Partner/Husband, Best Friend, Acupuncturist and Voiceover Talent - did all the heavy lifting with formatting for KDP and tolerated the duration of the labor and delivery of 11 Steps.

Izzy Graf and Tatum Graf - Daughters, Artists, Activists, Unicorns - supported the gestation of this work and continue to wrap their mother in divine feminine love. My heart is full.